CARD OF THANKS

We want to thank the people of Oxford for the many expressions of love and sympathy shown us in our great sorrow. It is a consolation to us to know that he was made happy by this same love and friendship while he lived and worked among you. No community could have shown more tenderness than you, and we appreciate it more deeply than we can express.

MRS. R. C. CRAVEN
MRS. R. L. HUNTER
MISS JOSEPHINE CRAVEN.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of the late Mrs. Edna M. Jones wish to thank their many friends for the expressions of sympathy and kindness shown them during the illness and death of their dear wife and mother.

Does Insolation Cause Insanity?

The statement is frequently made that farm women are in the majority in the populations of asylums for the insane. So far as we know there are no direct evidences of this statement, but it has come to be widely accepted.

Those who believe in the truth of this assertion, have a ready-made explanation. Farm life is so monotonous and the life of the farm woman is one of such extreme isolation that her mind weakens under the strain. As a matter of plain fact, mental aberrations are increasing in proportion to the increasing strain upon our nervous system due to increasing complexities of life. There are, of course, instances of persons who live hermit-lives and are considered 'mentally deficient.' In these cases, it is difficult to determine which is cause and which is effect; may it not be more than likely that people who live as hermits and without human association do so because they are mentally disturbed?

Increased insanity is more likely to come out of congested industrial centers than out of rural communities. The nervous system receives its severest strain in communities where life is most complex. This statement is not intended to underestimate the disadvantages of any form of life which contains too few social contacts. There is ample room for the improvement of social life in rural communities. More and better human contacts are needed. But, the best manner of approach is one which involves the largest amount of fact. From the standpoint of mental stability life on the farm holds out far better prospects than life in the city.—N. C. As They Make It In Oklahoma.

(Oklahoman)
Liquor so strong with acid that it ate holes through paper was seized in sections of the State by prohibition enforcement officers recently. Drops of the liquor fell accidentally on a newspaper on the officers' desk, and wherever the drops came in contact with the paper holes appeared immediately. Then the officers purposely poured some of the liquor on the paper, which was eaten up quickly. The still was taken with the liquor.

—Muscle reading, wrongly termed mind reading, is often possible by close attention. Every complete mental process expresses itself in movement and while in many cases these movements are involuntary, they give an inkling of the object or direction of the agent's thoughts.

WEEKLY AMBON OF ST. STEPHEN'S PARISH

TWENTY-THIRD SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Recently in a class in English, studying early English poetry, in one of our great Universities, the Professor, not a Churchman, stopped a student reading an assigned part aloud, and asked, "if he had been trained to read the Church Service," stating that such training was usually necessary in order to read intelligently the poetry of that period." We often miss the fact that a knowledge of the Prayer Book is in itself a liberal education, including the higher mathematics, necessary to understand the details of the Calendar. In this instance it was recognized that the familiar rhythm of the Prayer Book held the vibrant harmonies of the elder craft in words. Our Prayer Book does reflect the full history of our Anglo-Saxon race, religiously, socially, and politically, with its roots and principles running back to the gospel, when first revealed and taught. Half a page of our Communion Service was in common use among Christians a full generation before a single word of the New Testament was written.
