SUNBURN PREVENTED BY RED BATHING SUITS

Color Serves As Combatant To Sun's Reflected Rays and Absorbs Them. The bathing season is on and Gholson's pool is at its best. An eminent dealer says:

"Contrary to the popular belief, sunburn is not caused by the heat, nor by the direct rays of the sun. The fact that we have red blood saves us from discomfort in the direct rays of the sun. Sunburn is caused by the bombardment of the direct rays, plus the reflected actinic rays which are thrown back by the water. "Most people think heat causes the trouble. Not at all. The worst case of sunburn I was ever called upon to treat was that of a man who had been to the top of Pike's Peak. Here the reflected rays from the snow and ice and rocks caused a very severe case of sunburn although the temperature was decidedly low."

"Red serves as a combatant of the reflected sun's rays as it absorbs them. I don't see how any girl who uses rouge or lip stick plentifully before going in the water can suffer from sunburn. A red bathing suit would be the ideal solution for preventing sunburn. I have even directed some of my patients who burn easily to wear red veils, as they absorb the rays."

"The best treatment for sunburn is to dissolve plain laundry starch or corn starch in water and apply it. This helps the inflamed condition by evaporation."
