Wilson County Wins Award for Progress

RALEIGH.—Wilson County has won the “County of the Year in Rural Progress Contest,” sponsored by the N. C. Board of Farm Organizations and Agencies.

D. S. Weaver, director of the Agricultural Extension Service at State College and chairman of the board's contest committee, yesterday announced that Wilson will receive $1,000 in prizes.

Winners in the five “Challenge” areas of the state, in addition to Wilson, are Madison, Forsyth, Pitt and Union counties.

Eighty counties entered the contest and were judged by district supervisors of each of the eight agricultural agencies, having such personnel. Wilson won top state honors by having the highest rating among the five area winners.

Each area winner will receive $500 and the state winner will receive an additional $500.

This is the third year of the contest, originated to help implement North Carolina's Challenge Program for agricultural development.

Previous state winners were Rockingham and Orange counties. Pitt and Forsyth have previously won district prizes.

Donors of prize money are Progressive Farmer Magazine, $1,000;

MONKEYS AND EVERYTHING—Shipping progress continues its steadily increasing growth at the North Carolina State Docks at Wilmington. According to Colonel Richard S. Marr, executive director of the North Carolina State Ports Authority, the volume handled for the month of December will exceed 20,000 tons. This tonnage was made up of paper pulp from North Carolina, scrap steel for foreign export, and other general cargo items for import and export.

Anti-Theft Tips: At night park your car near a streetlight if possible. Auto thieves hesitate to work in lighted areas.
