agency and married an opera star. He was colorful, had a lot of imagination, and his bright candle went out at the age of 59.

Grace Di Biase is a happy girl, yet she paints vividly scenes of suffering. As I talked to her in the New York University Book Store, it seemed to me that her artist's eyes saw far beyond the walls of the building, and viewed the bigger realities of life. From Portland, Maine, she has been here ten years studying painting and opera. Around the corner, I viewed her impressive exhibit of religious art, outstanding among which was a striking picture of a suffering peasant in a concentration camp, entitled "Blessed Are the Persecuted." Miss Di Biase knows beauty, but she also sees the sadness in the world.

holds the 2nd Airborne two-mile and the 3rd Army three-mile records.

The highlight of Mike's college career came last spring during the Atlantic Coast Conference championships when he set a record-breaking pace in the two-mile run. Last month Mike beat Jim Beatty, Carolina's star distance runner, by some 300 yards to hand the Chapel Hill lad his first college defeat in a cross country meet.

Coach Derr, in commenting on his star runner, said, "I've never had the privilege of coaching a boy with Mike's determination and devotion for the sport."

Mike, who is majoring in rural recreation, plans to enter the coaching field after graduation. He would like to develop more interest in cross country in the high schools throughout the state.

Shea has been married for over a year to his influential fiancee. They have one boy.

Six Demonstration Clubs Are to Meet

"Christmas in Other Lands" will be the topic for meetings of home demonstration clubs scheduled for next week.

Saturday, Dec. 17: Mountain Creek Home Demonstration Club supper with Mrs. Leslie Blackwell.

The farmer had come a long way to see New York and now that he was here, he was taking it in fast. Already he had covered Times Square as thoroughly as he usually did his back 4-acre patch, and now he looked for new fields. It was early morning, so he caught the subway downtown, not realizing that this was the subterranean hazardous hour. Below ground, the job-going mob rocked and rolled him. At Wall Street, he finally emerged, never to be the same again. His shoes were scuffed, his overcoat ruffled, his tie awry, and...

used for horses. Not so in many instances here. Just off lower 5th Avenue is a little street named Washington Mews which was once inhabited by nags, not cats. The stables were rather fancy, however, being the Manhattan residences of such horses as those of the celebrated Mrs. Astor. When the fine four-legged fellows were replaced by less pleasant but faster motor transportation, people fixed up the abandoned stables and moved in. So there they are now and some of them paint. Grover Whalen lived in one before he got afflu-
