Cheated the Gallows.

Raleigh, July 17.—W. A. Potts who was to have been hanged at Washington, N. C., for the murder of Paul Lincke, committed more than a year ago, and who made an attempt on his life with poison some days ago and was reprieved, made a second attempt at suicide last night and was successful. Finding his guard he took a big dose of opium and morphine about 8 o'clock, and died about 12, notwithstanding the effort of the doctors to save his life. Much feeling exists in Washington, over the result, and there are intimations of foul play.

Judge Lynch in Asheville.

At a few minutes after 4 o'clock Sunday morning the city of Asheville was alarmed by the ringing of the fire-bell, on arriving at the jail it was found that a mob had taken the negro John Humphreys out and hung him to a limb.

The negro had met the 13 year old daughter of Benjamin Parkson in the suburbs of the town and criminally assaulted her. She was strangled and left senseless on the ground.

The police were notified and a search began immediately, and about nine o'clock the negro was found and identified by the girl.

About 2:15 Sunday morning a party entered the jail and took the prisoner by breaking the steel cage, and hung him about a quarter of a mile from the jail.

Left His Trunk.

There was a stranger stopped at the Boyden House some time last week, and who skipped, leaving his trunk in payment of his bill. The trunk was opened and found to contain a lot of old and very much soiled clothes, also a number of letters begging him to come home and lead a better life.

A Child Killed.

Another child killed by the use of opiates given in the form of soothing syrup. Sketches from an Humbl. No. 2.

"O the tasks in secret taken,
 For God alone to see;
 O the patient faith unshaken,
 Through 23 years of misery."

To-day Miss Polly passed again, her tall sinny, hairdorn form totting beneath the weight of the usual weeks' marketing; her stout red leather shoes made redder by her tramp through the deep mud, and her limp hoesman bonnet more limp and floppy, as the rain pours on it and in her face. She carries an umbrella—she has no hand for one, for straight at her side, each hand carries the same two-gallon bucket of milk and to each handle is tied the smaller bucket of butter or eggs. Under the right arm is a sack with a peck of sweet potatoes, and two large extra ones—"the largest I could find," for Miss B. who sent Mamma some tea, "and Mamma" wants her to have her very best, "in recognition of the kindness, and she apologizes for not being able to carry more. To dispose of some possible of these things, and hurry back through rain and mud, lest this dear old mother may need something she could not anticipate, or be lonely for a few moments more than absolutely necessary, is the spur to every movement, not even to rest the weary limbs till she is again at home. This one absorbing purpose, this deep and tender affection, this unremitting effort seems to fill up a life, all self-forgetting, all self-renouncing. Who knows what other love has in time filled this tender heart, what maiden plans and maiden hopes may have elained the place now all so full, what memory of an "I'd crushed and broken" still haunts its secret chambers. Those chambers which are yet not empty—filled and brimming over with filial affection—I have seen it overflow and stream out at mention of the prospect that the mother may soon be called away and she be left alone, alone, alone. I have heard her cry out—"O if she should pass away what shall I do! She is my dear dear mother, Oh Miss Polly she has become more than mother—if more than that can be. You are now virtually her mother and doubly beloved would be your life, should you be left behind her. It is true that not much more of life can be now before you, but I believe that work done and your purpose gone, your days would be shortened by a broken life, and broken heart.

"Beautiful hands are those that do
 Work that is earnest, brave and true
 Moment by moment the long life through"

Beautiful shoulders are those that bare
 Careless burdens of homely care
 With patient grace and daily prayer."

OBSEVER.

What we Think of Salisbury.

If any one doubts that Salisbury is a pretty place we beg him to drive over it—take first the length of Main street, and say (after leaving the business portion,) if, in both directions it is not more than an ordinary picture, particularly as you approach Gallows Hill, where all is new and fresh and sweet, every home in this section shows taste and care and a spirit of improvement. Linnis street is beautiful with its broad avenues almost in every part; Even the few unsightly places fail to break the impression of beauty one gets from the general view, though there is less of care bestowed on the sweet looking homes. Fulton and Bank streets, are also lovely, and the new and pretty cottages on either side, after crossing "Brooklyn Bridge" will claim the attention even of a stranger. Mr. Blackmer's handsome residence and expensive grounds shows beautifully as on one side fills an elaborate garden and on the other an exquisite lawn. The most attractive feature of our town is its trees. At Mr. Jno. Horah's and Mr. Manney's especially are seen as elegant trees as can be grown. At the latter place a perfect arbor is formed over the side walk. But one cannot enumerate all that makes Salisbury attractive. Take in the picture for yourself, and see if it is not a panorama worth all it costs.
