The court room was crowded during the judge's charge to the jury.

The jury was locked up at 9.55 this morning. The judge instructed the jury that the charge of pro Germanism against the Tribune and that it had a selfish interest in advocating sustained and the jury could not consider it. The judge gave definitions of the words "anarchist" and "anarchy," but instructed the jury that it was the duty of the jury itself to determine in what sense the newspaper used the words and what it would mean to its readers. There were two defenses, he continued. If the jury finds that the changes in the editorial were true that Mr. Ford was in fact an anarchist and an ingnorant idealist it was a complete defense. The right of "fair comment" was a second defense to be considered.
