"Grass in de Rum"

A good story is told of the introduction of mint juleps into Virginia. Years ago a Northern gentleman, who had made the acquaintance of a planter, was invited to the hospitable home of the latter. One day, while discussing their apple-jack, the Yankee asked his host if he had ever tasted a mint julep. The planter replied "No," and inquired how it was made. Upon being informed, he said he would at once import some mint seed from the North and try the tippie. The guest remarked there was no necessity, as he had noticed some mint growing on the plantation. Delighted to learn this fact, the planter dispatched a servant for the plant, and upon the negro's return with it, the julep was made, and the Southerner was of course ecstasy at the discovery, and kept his servant continually trotting for mint.

Two years after, the Northern gentleman revisiting Virginia, called at the plantation to see his old friend. Inquiring for him, of a servant, who answered his summons at the door, the latter shocked the visitor with the announcement of the planter's death. "Dead!" exclaimed the gentleman; "when and how?" "Ole Massa die about three weeks ago," was the reply. "You see, about two years ago, a german come here from the North, and tell ole massa how to put grass in his rum, and that's wat kill him."

TREASURE RECOVERED.—We learn that the strong box of the U. S. Ship "Cumberland," sunk by the Ram "Virginia," (famously known as the "Merrimac" in the great naval engagement in Hampton Roads,) was recovered by the sub-marine workmen employed in the work of raising the hull of the ship. The tugs employed in the aforesaid enterprise, came up last night whistling through their steam whistles jubilees at their success. The amounts reported as recovered are so varied that we forbear giving any of them, that the sum recovered is very large, there can be no doubt.—Norfolk Day Book of 6th.

Smoking has become so extensive among English sailors that the authorities have entirely forbidden it except on Thursday and Saturday afternoon;

Modern English Morality.

The moral offence, if committed with a lover under promise of marriage, is unluckily hardly regarded as any offence at all by English women beneath a certain rank in life. There is no influence of "public opinion" against it; it is taken by mothers, aunts, and companions, as an indiscretion or a weakness, but an amiable one; and really as quite a venial offence. As for the "natural affection" for a babe, it is a mere figment of imagination. Some women, under some circumstances—i. e. married women pretty well off—without doubt feel great affection for their infants. But the very fact of infanticide, of the customs of desertion and exposure, the monstrous proposition for erecting foundling hospitals, shows that it does not exist as a rule. There lives hardly a woman who, if her babe were illegitimate, and her own reputation at stake, would not, like Lady Macbeth, rather than lose her character. In the case of a governess, respectable milliner, or domestic servant, the pregnancy must be hidden and the babe disposed of somehow. That which is the cause of child murder amongst the respectable portion of unmarried mothers is shame and fear of degradation, and no institution can remedy this.—London Medical Times and Gazette.

"Pluck out her nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash his brains out!"

A VENERABLE NEGRO.—A late number of the Evening News says:

The oldest colored man in the State, reported at the Central Station this morning that he had been robbed of a watch which he had carried for thirty years.—Jones will be one 100 years old on the first of January next. He remembers the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown; his master, Col. Simms, who owned seven plantations and 600 slaves, being present at the surrender. Jones has plowed in the glebe with Henry Clay in the "Slashes of Hanover." When Burr was tried at Richmond, he ran away to get a sight at him, and got one of the most "devilish" whippings for it he ever received. When Admiral Cockburn sailed with his fleet up Chesapeake Bay, he sent word to Richmond that he would be there the next day to dine. The chivalry went out to meet him. Jones marched out with Andrew J. Stevenson, who commanded the "foot artillery."—William Wirt was Captain of the "flying artillery;" and Robert Canble of the "troopers." Jones shook hands with Lafayette, and now has lost his watch.

THE RULING PASSION.—The Memphis Bulletin tells a story of a woman, a refugee, with a small family dependent on her, who arrived at Memphis in great destitution. She had no dress save the faded calico, which she wore. A collection was taken up in her behalf and fifteen dollars were obtained for her. She was very grateful for the gift, and at once went to a neighboring store, and expended thirteen of it for a lace collar.
