NEAVE MUSICAL CONCERT.

Another Triumph for the Neave Conservatory of Music.

The select audience that gathered at the Neave music parlors last night were peculiarly fortunate in securing seats. All available space was taken before the performance began, and the usual perfect order and discipline marked the entire performance.

Notwithstanding the absence of at least four of the performers whose names were connected with seven numbers on the program, the evening's repertoire was carried out entire, other performers having been hastily substituted almost at the last hour. So perfect were the renditions that the most critical auditor could detect no discord; thus attesting the splendid training, received under these expert teachers, as well as the capacity and aptitude of the young musicians.

The program contained fourteen numbers, including solos, duets, trios, quartets and quintets, closing with a full orchestral rendition. The selections were from the high class authors, and brought into prominent exercise the best qualifications of the performers. With exquisite manipulation, rhythmic cadence and perfect time, the nimble fingers of the fairies swept over the keys, enchanting the audience, and making the older ones wish they could recall the days of their childhood.

The sweet, little ladies were attired in lovely pure white dresses—typical of their innocent hearts,—their dark and golden tresses blending in delightful contrast with the loveliness of their beautiful faces and sweet smiles.

Such perfect control, order, deportment, and management of the minutest detail marked every step of the program that every one in the audience was delighted, and all were filled with regret that the entertainment was so soon over.

The achievement of last night adds another triumph to the Neave Conservatory of Music, and makes Salisbury proud that such a splendid institution is located in their midst.

The writer rejoices over his good fortune in being permitted to be present and to enjoy the entertainment of the evening. B.
