The injury was slight but the hand has swollen from the effects of it. The Asheville Citizen says: The Southern railway has recently made a rule which pleases the engineers and firemen concerned very much. On the run of through freights between Asheville and Morristown engines on the "double-header" trains are placed together, instead of being separated a distance of seven cars. By this arrangement, which went into effect March 15, the men on the rear engine do not get the full benefit of the cinders from the front engine, as formerly, and communication between the two engines is easier. Heretofore the engines have been separated because it was not considered safe to load a bridge with two engines at the same time, but the bridges have been strengthened and freight trains are required not to make more than eight miles an hour over them.	Opening of the State Campaign. Chairman F.
