The results of all these are manifest not alone in the cities, but in and impress the population adalmost every town, village and vantageously, also compelling the hamlet. New buildings appear Japanese to guard all their transeverywhere. Sewer systems, port expeditions. water works, electric plants for lighting and for trolley lines are fast becoming as much of necessi ty as they are in the North and the West, and the South has the money to pay for them. Municipal bond issues have reached a huge aggregate, and have in general found ready sale as good prices, often by the immediate local mar ket. Southern ports have done an enormously increased business and Southern railways have been hard and stove, was knocked to the floor pressed to handle their traffic.
