QUEER ENGLISH BELIEFS.

Superstitions That Still Abide With the Country Folk.

There is a well known weed with dark blotches on it, not unlike black stains. I have been twice assured with the utmost seriousness by an old woman that "where you find them there a growing there's been a battle long ago."

The same dame once seemed rather in a hurry when buying a setting of eggs from me about tea time, and I found the reason was that she believed she had no luck with eggs if you did not set them before sundown. This is curious, for, though the modern poultry keeper might make the nest and place the eggs in it during the daytime, he would probably defer putting the "broody" on them till dusk that she might have the best chance of setting down quietly.

The other day in a neighboring cottage I was admiring a fine baby and ventured to suggest that it felt nails were left so long it might scratch its face. The mother said she would cut them. But the grandmother burst in with: "You'll do nothing of the sort, my dear, asking your pardon, sir. You don't seem to know, sir, that to cut a child's nails before it's twelve months old makes it light fingered." And I am perfectly certain the nails will not be cut. It will be of interest to add that the cottagers I speak of live near enough to London to see its lights in the sky.—London Chronicle.

Reason Enough.

"What! Marry my daughter?" snorted old Gotrox. "Why, you must be destitute of all reason!"

"Yes," interrupted young Poorley, with refreshing candor; "I admit I am destitute, but that very fact is my reason."—Philadelphia Press.

Judicial Prognostics.

"What kind of sentence did the judge give the weather man?"

"Fair, followed by clearing; hard labor, changing to variable; breeze and water toward evening; Sunday, soup."—Buffalo Express.

Useless.

"No, sir; I never borrow trouble."

"Neither do I, so why should I sit here listening to your argument about the wickedness of docking horses? I don't own a horse, and I never expect to."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Conscious Virtue.

Senator Blower (proudly)—No, sir; no one has ever attempted to bribe me. Senator Ketchum—Never mind. Some day, when it's a close vote, you'll get your chance.—Chicago Journal.

Good Luck For Turtles at Least.

The Chinese have a peculiar custom with regard to turtles, which they consider as very good joss. Almost any day one can see these creatures, some of them of huge size, being carried on board the river steamers, not to be taken to Canton for culinary purposes, but to be dumped into the sea and restored to liberty and freedom. Good luck is thought to follow.—Hongkong Press.

On Monday, Sept. 12
