It is said that there are 2,000 members of the Farmers Alliance in Wake county; and that from information derived from some of the more prominent, they are of opinion that there are certain economic questions of far greater importance than mere party. That's good as far as it goes.

There seems to be a sort of mutual admiration society in this State composed of the representatives of the organs who constitute mainly all the virtue, all the intelligence or all the wealth of the press gang in this State. We are glad to note, however, that the more thoughtful, reliable, and practical editors do not seem to be members.
