Colonizing Foreign Horses in Ver-

Dr. J. Seward Webb, of New York City, has just received another importation of European horses. This last lot is a splendid collection of massive-shouldered, strong-necked, big-thighed, Per. cherons, and very handsome beasts they are. Dr. Webb will send them at once to his farm in Vermont. There, a few the animals for sale in Denme Bufully betaks, the improvement of horses h ig. He is going to experiment, all ne thinks the Vermont climate is the best in the worldto develop perfect specimens of horse-flesh. It will be a very costly experi-ment, but Dr. Webb does not mind a little matter like that, especially as he is not doing it to make a fortune, but to show some other fellow how to make a What is commonly called the knee-capwrites a physician in the Boston Herald, is a small, triangular bone situated at the front of the knee-joint. One of its purposes is to protect the joint; another is to favor the action of certain muscles. When this bone is broken across the parts are separated by its attachments. To bring them together until they are united is always a difficult operation, unless the fragments are wired together. There are certain fractures which cannot be treated in this way, but in those which can the method should be employed, for it promises by far the best results. Not only is recovery more rapid than where other procedures are used, but the victim suffers the least possible discomfort. When the knee-cap isbroken and the physician advises "wiring" the patient ought by all means, inhis own interest, to unhesitatingly con-
