THE STATE'S SURVEY.

The Latest State News Colled From Our Exchanges.

Wake county has a citizen 107 years of age. This individual, who will likely have the rare distinction of witnessing the two centuries, is a colored man from House's creek township. His name is Peter Byrd. The fact that Wake county has a citizen of such extreme old age was discovered at the sheriff's office when a son of the old man came to his taxes. The son gave his age as fifty-two and he paid $2.68 tax for his father, who owns a small piece of property in House's creek township. The jailer, O. L. Parham, recognized the son and he corroborated the statement that Peter Byrd is 107 years old. Mr. Parham, who is no spring chicken, stated that Peter was an old man when he first saw him as a boy, and that was long before the war. The information was obtained from Peter's son that the old man is active, gets about well and is very hearty.—Raleigh Post.

Washington, Nov. 15.—W. C. Chesser, of Mooresboro, is missing and the police of this city have been asked by his wife to hunt him up. Mr. Chesser is of an inventive turn of mind, and left home some time in the latter part of October for this city to take out a patent. Whether he reached here is not known. Inquiries at the patent office develop the fact that no applications for patents by Mr Chesser are of record not later than in July. No one there recalls him. Mr. Chesser is represented as a sober, staid citizen. So far as known.

M. L. JACKSON.

here his domestic relations at home were pleasant, but still the fascinations of Washington's beautiful women are known the world over, and Mr. Chesser is not adamant. At any rate the police here always go on the theory that there is a woman in every case, and are proceeding on in Mr. Chesser's case.
