It it is not saying too much, we think, to assert that it is natural that there should be some complaints. Had the euccessful candidates failed, some of them possibly, or some of their over zealous friends certainly, would have found fault, just as much as the zealous partizans of the defeated candidates do now.

We despise and denounce sted to notify fair to secure a nomination or an election. We would rather see our candidate de feated, honorable methods only having been used, than to be successful by the use, by himself or friends, of any dishonorable means. It is human to complain and to find fault-some times there are just grounds; at others, only imaginary-but whether real or imaginary, it is prudent and patriotic to bury complaints and objections; be silent and fall into line, and, if any wrongs guard against them in the future, and make is on ground for complaint.
