

CO. H. ORDERED TO GREENVILLE.

Company H. left last night at 8:00 o'clock for Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina.

The Company has been mobilized here for over a month, and during that time it has been an orderly body of men.

The Company under the leadership of Captain Price and Lieutenants Limer and McCullen has been drilled well and the daily improvement shown is a tribute to their ability as officers and to the spirit with which the men of H. Company have obeyed their commands.

Orders to entrain Thursday night reached Captain Price late Wednesday evening, and the one-hundred and twenty seven men of the Company were busy all day Thursday putting things in readiness to leave.

The Company is scheduled to arrive at Greenville Friday mid-day.

Warrenton will miss her boys in khaki, but duty calls—and they go for "the path of duty is the way to glory."

OLD TIMES IN WARREN

(By T. J. Taylor, D. D.)
NOT
It sighted low in every heart,
We hear it, each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call,
They throw the silence of the breast
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walks with us no more!

'Tis hard to take the burden up,
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown;
But oh, 'tis good to think of them,
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been
Though they are here no more!

More homelike seems the vast unknown,
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare;
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, thy love abides,
Our God, forevermore!

USE YOUR HEAD

"Get me a pail of water, son," called Jamie's mother.

Reluctantly, Jamie came from the depths of his absorbing book to answer presently, "All right, mother, as soon as I can find my book-mark."

With a finger between the book's pages Jamie searched high and low. Finally muttering, "Aw, I can't find the old thing," he turned down the corner of a page and left the room where his Uncle Richard was reading.

When Jamie returned his uncle was slowly turning the pages of the pretty book he had put down. He noticed several other books on his uncle's lap also. "I've been glancing through some of your school and story books, Jamie," explained his uncle with an odd smile, "and from the turned down corners and the number of pencil marks I find, I judge you must lose your book-mark very often."

Jamie's face reddened. He did not like to have his jolly Uncle Richard discover any of his shortcomings. He knew that some of his schoolbooks were pretty well spattered with checks words and sentences indicating what and where the lesson had been each day.

"I have to mark the lesson or I won't remember where it is," apologized Jamie. "I know it makes the book look bad, and of course the teacher doesn't like it, but I've got to do it if she won't let me whisper and find out where the lesson is. I only turn down the corner of a page in my story books."

"But I just can't remember the place," protested Jamie, "if I don't mark it in some way."

"All fol-de-rol, boy," cried his uncle. "I haven't used a book-mark, in twenty years yet I never have any trouble in finding my place."

"Maybe that is only because you don't have a pencil handy," laughed his Uncle Richard. Then with a serious face his uncle asked: "But why use any mark at all, Jamie?"

"Why, how'll I remember where the place is?" exclaimed Jamie, in astonishment.

"What's your head for?" queried his uncle. "Mark the place or lesson in your head and then the mark'll never get lost. And, besides, your books won't look as though the baby or the puppy was had hold of them."

"Well, I don't see how you do it," said Jamie. "I can't." "I just remember where it is and turn right to it, that's all," answered his uncle. "Listen, Jamie, I used to think the same as you do—that I had to have a mark. But, thank goodness, a friend opened my eyes, and I learned to use my head a little more and my pencil and fingers a little less. And I've been glad of it, many a time. At the start I stopped putting in any mark at all. Of course, at first I had some trouble in remembering what the lesson was or where I had left off in a story book, but when I knew that I had to depend on my head and not on the mark of some kind I soon learned to remember. I noted carefully, before I closed the book, just where it was and what I had read last. Now I never seem to think about it at all when I close the book, yet I turn to the right place at once the next time. You can learn to do the same if you make up your mind to do it. Try it, Jamie, and no longer be one of those slaves to a book mark that is constantly getting lost."

"I'm going to," said Jamie earnestly. "Why, I'll get a much higher mark in department if I don't have to whisper about where the lesson is; and then my books will look a whole lot better without all those marks."

"Right Jamie," declared his uncle, "Just use your head."

And Jamie did. Suppose you try it.—Oscar H. Roesner, in Young Churchman.

Those who have endeavored to teach him to do well, have taught few to die willingly.—Dr. Johnson.

A lawyer died in an American provincial town, and fellow lawyers wrote over his grave:

"Here lies a lawyer and an honest man."

Not long after, the governor of the province visited the town, and among other places inspected the cemetery. When he came to the lawyer's grave he stopped, read the inscription and turning to the head inspector, said:—"Look here, my friend. We wink at a good many things in this province, but I do object to your bury two men in one grave."—Our Dumb Animals,

THE RED CROSS AND INSURANCE

It is a matter of importance to the Red Cross, that, at the instance of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, a comprehensive measure providing for the financial assistance of the families of American soldiers and sailors has been introduced in Congress.

Henry P. Davison, Chairman, on behalf of the Red Cross War Council, recently authorized the following:

"Obviously the task of providing for the financial assistance of the families of our soldiers and sailors is so large that the Government alone can assume. In no other way can the burden be discharged fairly and as a matter of right rather than charity. No voluntary organization, or organizations, could adequately cope with a duty of such magnitude."

The bill, which was introduced in both Houses of Congress simultaneously, represents a very careful study of the whole problem of possible dependency as a result of the war and a conscientious estimate of the Government's recognition of its responsibility.

As drawn, the bill is an amendment to the Act establishing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and adds to the functions of this Bureau the administration of family allowances and allotments to dependents, of compensation for death or disability, and of life insurance for men in the military or naval service.

In a memorandum, Secretary McAdoo explains the operation of the proposed legislation.

"I realize," says the Secretary of the Treasury, "that the cost involved in the promulgation of such a comprehensive plan is a most important factor to be considered. Actuarial estimates were submitted to me. These estimates are necessarily of a tentative character, owing to the fact that it is impossible to secure accurate data upon which to base calculations. After careful consideration of these estimates, and after consultation with Captain S. H. Wolfe, of the War Department, one of the leading actuaries of the country, I have reached the conclusion that if the bill is promptly enacted into law the total expenditure for the first and second years will be as follows:

	First year	Second year
Family allowance	$141,000,000	$190,000,000
Death indemnities	3,700,000	22,000,000
Compensation for total disability	5,250,000	35,000,000
Compensation for partial disability	3,200,000	21,000,000
Insurance against death and disability	23,000,000	112,500,000
Total...	$176,150,000	$380,500,000

"The bill is intended to meet those essential and fundamental principles of justice which you have so much at heart. Its main purpose is to grant a reasonable government indemnity against the losses and risks incurred in the discharge of a patriotic duty and in the performance of an extraordinarily hazardous service to which the Government has called and forced the citizen.

It provides not only for the man but for his family.

"It aims to accomplish these ends by granting a reasonable measure of indemnity against the risk of loss: (1) of support of the bread-winner; (2) of life and limb, (3) of present insurability at ordinary rates.

"The risk of dependency, in the case of an enlisted mans family, is indemnified against by allotment of part of the pay of the enlisted man, supplemented by a family allowance granted and paid by the Government."

This system, as explained, means that the enlisted man shares with the Government in providing for the financial needs of his family. The compulsory allotments from the enlisted mans pay must equal the family allowance from the Government, with a minimum, however, of $15. monthly, and a maximum of one-half pay.

There is a scale of allowance determined by the size of the dependent family, so that the monthly allowance ranges from $5 to $50, according to the number of dependents.

Secretary McAdoo illustrates the working system in the following example: "A private gets $33 a month for service abroad. If he has a wife and two children he must allot to them at least $15 out of his pay. The Government supplements this by giving the family an allowance of $32.50.
