DREAM

What is this dream I have, between sleeping and waking?—
This dream of waking the English moors in the twilight?
I who have never stepped a foot upon England,
Walking the purple moors in the windy twilight.

What is this dream I have between sleeping and waking?—
Of walking a road alone, and coming from darkness
Into the light of a camp; the fire-light on evil faces—
Strangeness and fear, then diving again into darkness?

What is this dream called life, between sleeping and waking?
This coming from darkness to light in being to being?
Life is a spiny camp . . . a light upon evil faces.
Death is darkness again, and windy moors in the twilight.
