

DANIELS TALKED FOR GOVERNOR

Strong Pressure Exerted To Get Him Into Race For Chief Executive's Job

OTHER STATE CONTESTS

By M. L. SHIPMAN

Raleigh, Sept. 28.—The chief political topic of conversation in Raleigh just now revolves around the question of whether or not Josephus Daniels will be a candidate for Governor. He has just returned from a week's stay at his summer home at Lake Junaluska. He was undoubtedly trying to settle finally the great decision. Strong pressure is being exerted from many quarters to get him into the race. The general impression is that if he enters the race he will survive the first primary easily and the great contest would be in the second primary.

That the entrance of Daniels into the gubernatorial race would completely alter the present political situation is admitted on all sides. Just what would be the final result is a matter of opinion. One result at the outset might be the voluntary elimination of Attorney General Brummitt although he has not indicated by any act or word that he would step down. However, he has so far refrained from making any definite announcement of his candidacy. The Daniels candidacy would also have repercussions in the Senatorial race. It is these unknown political factors that are being discussed.

While the gubernatorial race with its imposing list of candidates is being most discussed, there are other contests for State offices with complications. For instance, the contest for State Commissioner of Labor and Printing. Major A. L. Fletcher, of the State Insurance, is the only announced candidate, but there will be others. R. R. Lawrence, president of the State Federation of Labor, is seriously considering becoming a candidate. If he finds that he cannot, for personal reasons, make the race, then it is expected that T. A. Wilson, a member of the State Industrial Commission, will enter the contest. Others prominently mentioned include Clarence Mitchell, Raleigh printer; Claude L. Albee, Charlotte printer and member of the Charlotte city council, and Mrs. McIver Scott, of Greensboro, a daughter of the late Charles D. McIver.

Then there is the contest for Secretary of State in which the incumbent, J. A. Hartness, and former Insurance Commissioner Stacy Wade, of Raleigh, are pitted against each other, both being astute politicians. Major Baxter Durham, State auditor, will also have opposition. Chester Bell, auditor at State Prison, is being groomed by the opposition. W. A. Graham, Commissioner of Agriculture, is also slated to have opposition. Frank Jeter, who handles publicity for the agricultural extension service, is mentioned and Fred Latham, of Belhaven, may also get into the race.

A prospective State political figure of importance was brought into the limelight by the election of Henry L. Stevens, Jr., of Warsaw, as National Commander of the American Legion. General Albert Cox, of Raleigh, often mentioned as a possible candidate for Governor, tried unsuccessfully to win the position now held by Stevens. At one time several years ago it appeared that he had a chance to win, but at the last moment the honor was awarded some other State. His elimination after being prominently boosted for the position dimmed his political prestige. By the same token, the political prestige of Stevens has been immensely enlarged.

The record breaking enrollment of 1,900 students at the opening of State College is generally ascribed as one of the results of the depression, many young men without jobs having taken the advice of their elders to get an education. At the same time it adds to the burdens of those who have to figure on ways and means of balancing budgets. The record breaking enrollments at nearly all the colleges is taken as an indication of the increased interest of the people generally in education.

Eastern North Carolina heard a lot about the State Fair when a hundred Raleigh men made a tour of 500 miles in two days and visited 47 towns. The State college band of thirty young men made a hit everywhere. The trip resulted in arousing much interest in the Fair, which opens on October 12th and continues for a week. Despite the depression, the management expects a record attendance, as good roads make it possible for people to come with a minimum of cost.

Wake county commissioner continue to struggle with fixing a tax rate. Owing to bonded debts with heavy interest charges, it is hard to reduce expenses. After paring and trimming to the limit, the best the commissioners could accomplish was a rate of 88 cents, which is 22 cents more than the 66 cent rate which the county could have secured had it been in position financially to take advantage of the legislative action in taking over the schools and roads.

Further steps toward safeguarding bank funds has been taken by the State Advisory Banking Commission, which was authorized by the last Legislature to take over supervision of the trust funds deposited in banks. Previously the banks operating trust departments had no supervision and all that was required to do business was a certificate left with the Insurance Department that it was solvent to the extent of $100,000. Numerous banks have trust funds running into the millions so that this supervision was inadequate. However, they are now required to protect these funds with bonds or securities.

Numerous meetings of cotton farmers throughout Eastern North Carolina have petitioned for a special session of the Legislature to take action similar to that of Texas in regard to curtailment of cotton acreage. Governor Gardner and the Council of State have been averse to calling such a session, taking the position that North Carolina through the steps already taken in emphasizing diversification and the further lack of fertilizers next year will put it in the Texas class without legislative action.

The acquittal of Gordon Watkins, former Wake county supervisor, charged with manslaughter growing out of the death last year of Willis Bellamy, a negro convict, has received widespread comment. He was charged with cruel and inhuman treatment of the prisoner in violation of the prison rules.

The State's printing has come back home. Seven North Carolina firms, four of them in Raleigh, were awarded contracts for State printing. Some of the State printing has been done in Indiana for the last several years.

A new turn was given to the failure of the brokerage firm of Durfey & Marr last year when a grand jury returned an indictment charging S. Wade Marr with collusion in the looting of the Tucker estate for which Cary K. Durfey was convicted. Sentence of Durfey has been held up until after the trial of Marr. It has been suggested that Durfey may testify against his former partner at the trial of the latter.

Raleigh city commissioners are still trying to balance the city budget. Police Commissioner Williamson wants to cut salaries 10 per cent but Mayor Iseley and Public Works Commissioner Page oppose such action. As they constitute a majority, they hold the veto power. In the meantime the city of Raleigh has been given permission to refund $50,000 of the $150,000 bonds that mature this year.

A survey covering 66 counties by Charles A. Sheffield, assistant agricultural director at State College, discloses that North Carolina farmers have increased their food supplies, there being a surplus without a market in some counties, but they are short on cash. North Carolina's "live-at-home" program has recently attracted National attention.

Commissioner of Revenue Allen J. Maxwell quickly suppressed the furor caused by reports of disorderly conduct by his side, Sprague Silver, at a conference of motor vehicle supervisors in Chattanooga, Tenn. Silver was fired and his job combined with that of his assistant, L. S. Harris, who was given both jobs. Thus the talk was hushed and a move toward economy made at the same time.

State Highway Commissioner E. B. Jeffers continues to be the State's greatest traveler. He manages to keep in touch with his office, address various gatherings and covers a vast expanse of highways in his car. He does his own driving and wastes no time. He enjoys it and thrives on it.

To Request Further Investigation of Bishop

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—District Attorney Rover announced today the District of Columbia grand jury would investigate charges that Bishop James Cannon Jr., and Ada L. Burroughs, former treasurer of the Virginia anti-Smith committee, violated the Corrupt Practices Act in the 1928 Presidential campaign.

The investigation will be completed October 8.

Rover said the jury would determine whether the alleged failure to report certain campaign expenditures to the clerk of the House of Representatives violated the law.

The attorney said a score of witnesses including several bishops and officials of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, would be subpoenaed before the grand jury.

The list of witnesses was not disclosed as containing the names of neither the bishop nor any of the Senators who conducted an investigation into the bishop's campaign activities.

It was described as necessary to expedite action in passing the statute of limitations to expire.
