Citizens Of Wise To Appear Before School Commission

Citizens of Wise will appear before the State school commission this morning at 10:30 o'clock in an effort to have a high school located at Wise, it was learned yesterday at the office of the superintendent of schools.

Superintendent Allen said yesterday that he did not believe that the commission would attempt to arrange the districts in the county until after the Wise school question was settled, as in the event such school is located there, it would be necessary to make other changes in the county.

"It seems that the State school commission," Mr. Allen said, "is working on the policy of making a school district around each of the accredited white high schools, including all schools from whose territory and children go to the accredited high school; and they have been calling on us for additional information along this line. If they allow the Wise high school, that would change the number of districts and they are waiting to settle all these matters at that time."

"It does not seem to be likely that we can appoint committeemen before the first Monday in July but of course we can't tell definitely now," Mr. Allen added.

23 Hoboes Sent To Prison Camp By Norlina Mayor

Twenty-three hoboes, picked up at Norlina Monday night and early Tuesday morning by railroad detectives and other officials, were sent to the Warren County Prison Camp on Tuesday to begin 30-day road sentences.

There were nearly 40 men lifted from the trains, but some of this number were able to pay fines and others were allowed to go their way after giving plausible excuses for riding the rails.

Mayor Albert Fleming who tried the men said that the wholesale capture was made in an effort to curb the damage that the railroad company is suffering from the free riders who have been breaking into the cars and destroying stock.

"Many of the hoboes who pass through here," Mayor Fleming said, "are out of work and are simply riding up and down the tracks preying upon the shipments of perishable goods. They don't mind if they are caught. As a matter of fact some of those picked up Tuesday morning begged for a 60-day sentence when I sent them to the road for 30 days."

The hoboes captured were both white and colored and hailed from far and near.

BLALOCK URGES COOPERATION

Predicts Poor Prices Unless Reduction Plan Goes
Over Successfully

A LARGE CARRYOVER

RALEIGH, June 22.—Urging the farmers to cooperate in the government's acreage reduction plan, U. Benton Blalock, president of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, today said that with a 13,000,000 bale carryover and good prospects for a crop on 40,000,000 acres this year only "an optimist can look forward to anything like a fair price for cotton this fall unless our acreage reduction campaign goes over as a big success."

Mr. Blalock termed the plan as "probably about the best that could be submitted under the authority vested in the Secretary of Agriculture through the Agricultural Adjustment Act," and summarized the following as seven inducements offered cotton farmers to cooperate in the plan:

"It offers a very fair rental for cotton lands according to productivity.

"With options on cotton at six cents per pound the cotton farmer can immediately close out his options for three to three and one-half cents per pound profit.

"If he so desires he may hold his options and if the production for the season is curtailed two to three million bales and the price of cotton is thereby increased, he not only profits by the increase in price on his cotton held under options but also on the balance of the crop that he produces.

"The cotton farmer by disposing of a portion of his crop now eliminates all crop hazards such as droughts, floods, hail storms, boll weevil and other insect ravages.

"He saves all further expense of cultivation and the harvesting of that portion abandoned."

"He 'cashes in' on a part of his crop at a time when the average cotton farmer has nothing to sell and no money in bank or pocket.

"The producer is allowed to plant the abandoned acres in late corn, forage crops, or any other kind of crop for home consumption and the Southern farmer rarely ever has an overproduction of food or feed crops."

Mr. Blalock who has spent considerable time in Washington recently conferring with those in charge of the cotton acreage reduction division, has contended from the beginning that to be successful any acreage reduction plan would have to offer greater advantages to the producers who cooperate than to those who do not cooperate.

Answering the question "What are the reasons for the adoption of this very drastic method for cotton acreage reduction?" Mr. Blalock said:

"We are suffering from a heavy overproduction of cotton and are going into the new year with the largest carryover of American cotton ever known, approximately 13,000,000 bales, or almost a year's supply. To get this annual carryover down to a normal basis of four or five million bales through a policy of 'letting nature take its course' would mean that within three or four years under the workings of the unhampered law of supply and demand this goal might be reached, but it would mean our continuing the production of cotton under unprofitable price levels in the meantime."

Crop Reduction Plan Under Way In Warren

Way The Wallace Cotton Plan Works In Case John Doe

WASHINGTON, June 20.—Here is how the Wallace cotton plan would work out in the case of John Doe who has a 10-acre patch over the hill:

John has been getting an average of 200 pounds of lint cotton to the acre for some years and his crop looks good for that amount again this year.

Next week when the campaign for reducing acreage gets under way, John will attend a meeting called by his county agricultural agent or some other representative of the Department of Agriculture.

At the meeting he will find that he may get cash for plowing up part of his crop if enough other farmers do the same thing to justify going ahead with the plan.

He may offer to plow up one acre three acres or four acres. Because John has been getting more than an average crop out of his field he will be entitled to more rent.

Three acres would be about the amount that Secretary Wallace would like him to take out of production for that sized farm.

Upon acceptance of his offer by Wallace, a contract would be presented to him and he would find that, since his production was between 175 and 224 pounds to the acre, he would be entitled to $14 cash rent for each of the acres he plowed under or a total of $42.

Or, he might choose instead to take $10 an acre, a total of $30 for the three acres, and an option on 600 pounds of lint cotton to which his acreage and reduction would entitle him.

This 600 pounds would be equal to the amount of cotton which his three acres would be expected to produce. He could get the option without paying out any money. He would simply be credited with 600 pounds of cotton at six cents a pound.

He would be entitled to any sum over six cents a pound that cotton was sold for at any time he decided it ought to be sold. There will be some regulations later telling him just how to go about that.

Anyway, he would receive the cotton at six cents and it is selling in the markets today for from eight to nine cents. The cotton may be 1200 miles away but it is John's for the time he holds the option.

In either case, before John gets the money, a representative will be around to see that he has plowed up the three acres.

He may plant something else on that part of his patch so long as it is eaten on the farm—or he may let it lie idle.

He will not be permitted to spend the money he took in to put a lot of extra fertilizer on the rest of his patch, but must go right on with his ordinary plans for the other seven acres, picking it and selling it as he desires.
