SENATOR SMITH STRONGLY IN FAVOR OF KERR MEASURE

Raleigh, May 16.—Tobacco farmers generally in North Carolina, as well as all those interested in bettering the condition of agriculture and business in the state, should do everything possible to secure the quickest possible enactment of the Kerr tobacco control bill, Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina said here this morning before leaving for Washington. He was the principal speaker here last night at the Farmer's Night dinner at State College. Unless the Kerr tobacco control bill is passed, there is danger that the burley growing sections in Tennessee and Kentucky may greatly expand their plantings and thus depress the price for flue cured tobacco even though the flue cured growers have abided by the terms of their contracts, he pointed out.

Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer, also holds the same opinion of the situation as does Senator Smith and regards as imperative the enactment of the Kerr bill if the tobacco farmers in the flue cured areas are to be assured a fair price for their crop this year.

Senator Smith believes the outlook for a horizontal reduction of 40 per cent in the Federal tax on manufactured tobacco products is still bright and getting brighter and believes it holds more promise for better prices to farmers for their tobacco than almost anything else. "If the Government really wants to help the tobacco farmers and boost prices and make these various regulatory laws unnecessary, the best thing it can do is to reduce the Federal tax on tobacco products as is now proposed by the House Ways and Means Committee," Senator Smith said. "For by requiring this reduction to be reflected in better prices to the growers, increased consumption will result and every one even the manufacturer's will be better off despite the fact that they will not be allowed to increase their margin of profit. The greater volume of sales and the increased demand for tobacco will do the trick."

Getting back to the Kerr bill, of which Congressman John H. Kerr of the Second Congressional District here in North Carolina is the author, Senator Smith pointed out that he regarded the bill as necessary if tobacco farmers are to get parity prices for their crop this year. The bill would impose a tax of from 25 to 33 1-3 per cent on all tobacco not produced under crop reduction agreements.

"Not only have the great majority of the cotton farmers in North and South Carolina and Virginia signed these crop reduction agreements, but most of them already have their crop planted," Senator Smith pointed out. "Thus it would be impossible for any of these tobacco farmers in the flue cured areas to increase their plantings, even if they wanted to," Senator Smith pointed out. "But if the Kerr bill does not pass, the way will be left open for the burley growers in Tennessee and Kentucky to increase their plantings almost without limit. This would mean a big increase in the burley crop next fall, which in turn would tend to depress the price of flue cured tobacco, even though it remained within the limits expected from the acreage reduction program."

"As soon as I get back to Washington I am going to confer with Congressman Kerr, Secretary Wallace and others and do everything I can to see if the bill cannot be passed as soon as possible."

Senator Smith paid a decided compliment to Congressman Kerr, saying:

"I have known Judge Kerr for many years and I know of no member of Congress who is more interested in the welfare of the farmers or who has worked harder to help them than he has. He is a quiet and modest man and not given to talking about what he does, after having been associated with him for years, I know of no one who has worked harder for agriculture and for the betterment of the farmers than he has."

Senator Smith said that he only intended to support the Kerr bill in the senate and fight for its passage there, but that he was going to back the proposal to reduce the Federal tax on manufactured tobacco products 40 per cent as advocated by Congressman Peoples and Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee. "There are too many highly educated theoretical agricultural experts and not enough practical farmers with a first-hand knowledge of conditions," Senator Smith said.
