PREPAREDNESS essential I watched the great Army Day parade in New York on April 4th.

I don't think we are likely to be attacked or invaded by any foreign nation. But I am sure that, the world being what it is, we would be inviting attack if we did not keep ourselves prepared to resist it.

PATRIOTISM ours I got a thrill out of the Army Day parade, not so much from the splendor of the uniforms and the music of the bands, as from the companies and battalions of boys, members of various cadet corps, who marched behind the flags.

I hope none of those boys is ever called upon to kill an enemy. I hope none of them is ever killed in war. But I hope that if the occasion ever comes again when the people of America have to resort to the crude implements of bloodshed to reaffirm their devotion to the greatest of all spiritual concepts, the concept of ordered liberty for every human being, these boys will feel, as the men of America have felt from the beginnings of our nation, that life without liberty is unendurable, death preferable to submission to any form of compulsion that would restrict any man's liberty to order his own life.

IDEALS the first The greatest danger to America that I see is the danger that we are losing sight of the ideals upon which our nation was founded and in the pursuit of what we have grown to greatness. And first among those ideals I would list the ideal of personal liberty of thought, speech and action.

I see signs all around that suggest that great groups of Americans no longer cherish those liberties, and that other groups are definitely bent on destroying them.

There is more to patriotism than being ready to go to war. It seems to me that any man who does not do whatever lies in his power, to challenge any attempt, either from within or without his country's boundaries, to curtail any of his or other people's legitimate liberties is not much of a patriot.

Unless we stand up for our liberties, and refuse to surrender them, it won't be long before we have no liberty left worth fighting for.

VALUES change The most striking change in the thinking of Americans in recent years has been the shifting of standards of value. The emphasis is more upon material values, less upon real values.

Real values are not measurable in dollars. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" It is utter nonsense to talk of liberty as if it had only such value as can be compensated for in money. It is worse than nonsense, it is stupid, almost criminal folly, to teach the young that success consists in making money.

The secret of success lies in learning how to live with one's self.

I meet many young folks who seem, by their words and acts, to have been taught that the world owes them a living. They think that happiness comes only from the possession and use of the things money can buy. Nothing is falseer than that.

SECURITY courage We hear much these days about security. Security for the aged, security for the wage-worker, security for the farmer. I don't hear much about security for the man or woman who doesn't ask help except to be left free to do as he pleases with his own possessions.

The talk is all of economic security. Some day we are going to wake up to the fact that there is no such thing; certainly not at any price most of us can afford to pay.

We hear that our forefathers came to America in search of security. The security they sought was security from interference with their liberty of thought, of speech and of choosing their own way of living. They did not come here to gain economic security at the cost of liberty, but to gain liberty in order to take a chance at building their own economic security.
