Today and Tomorrow

The whole world of scholarship paying compliments this month to the oldest American institution of learning, Harvard University, which was founded in 1636, three hundred years ago.

Harvard's tercentenary interests me particularly because one of my earliest American ancestors, Dr. Benjamin Stockbridge, was one of the first students in the "college or schoale" which the Rev. John Harvard endowed in the town which was named for is own English university town of Cambridge.

In its beginning Harvard was a crude, one-teacher boarding school, where Nathaniel Eaton, the master, half starved and mercilessly whipped the unfortunte boys. But from that seed sprang what is, I believe, and that when she broke the most far-reaching educational influence in America, and the most democratic.

COTTON . . New York state is about to try out the new type of cotton road, on a six-mile stretch in the Mohawk Valley. Cotton roads have been quite successful in the South, as the cheapest improvement on the ordinary gravel or clay road.

I have been trying to remember a time when the cotton planters of the South were not in distress, seeking new uses and markets for their surplus product. It was a year or so before the World War that the "buy a bale of cotton" propaganda was started all over the country, to help the Southern planters.

The truth about cotton, it seems to me, is that it can be grown profitably only in especially favored regions or where there is a plentiful supply of the cheapest manual labor to "chop" and pick it. Most of coton's troubles arise from trying to grow it under conditions which militate against profits-

FIGS . . . . . . from abroad "Pigs," as my friend Eliis Parker Butler pointed out in the story which made him famous, "is pigs." In "Pigs is Pigs" it was a country railway agent who insisted that guinea-pigs should come under the same classification as regular pork-

In England, where they have been breeding pigs since long before Columbus discovered America, pigs is also pigs, but they know they are not all alike. The kind that bring home the bacon in England are known only by the name of Large Black pigs. They are said to be far more docile than the "fancy" breeds, and also more profitable-

Uncle Sam has just imported four Large Black Pigs, two boars and two sows, and is going to try crossing them with familiar American breeds. Which is interesting to hograisers, but to most of us pigs is just pigs.

BATS . . . . . . . some useful I have long accounted bats as among the most interesting as well as the most useful little animals we have. They are useful, because if you have plenty of bats flying around your house on Summer evenings you won't have so many mosquitoes. Indeed, one Texas town some years ago built a "bat tower" in which these flying mice could McGeachy, chairman of the underlive and breed, and so get rid of a serious mosquito pest-

Bright Urges Farmers To Save All Hay Possible

By BOB BRIGHT, County Agent

Farmers should save a surplus of feed crops this fall. The drought in the West has reduced the supply of hay and corn and the prices will be high in the spring. Under the soy beans and velvet beans. Hay will keep teams in very good condition with the use of very little corn. I have a circular from Washsave rag weed for feed. This shows the scarcity of these hay crops-

I would advise those farmers moving garbage from the town was to cut sufficient for their home before the board in regard to the needs and some for sale. In some cases it will pay to turn under these crops after harvesting sufficient poundage for home use. There has been some misunderstanding about the town will assume this duty. Mr. the use of these crops under the present program, but the three crops named above may be harvested for hay or seed and still the acreage planted in these crops will qualify the producer for his diversion pay-

Sufficient seed should be saved to plant the required acreage in 1937. The seed of all legumes are expensive and any farmer that will give a little thought and care to the saving of the seed will find that it is a paving program.

Several farmers in this county save their clover seed and find that it pays to do so. Home grown seed are superior, in most cases, to foreign seed. Home grown seed are acclimated to this climate. They are of known variety and free of noxious weed seed.

The weather has been ideal for saving hay this fall and where the ringent measures to see that the farmer has legumes planted there is not any excuse for him not savpublic is protected from 'gyp' gam- ing sufficient hay for home use.
