

BRUCE BARTON

Says:

Experience Teaches Dollar Worth One day the vice-president of a large company was snowing me and explaining how carefully the company handles the funds entrusted to it. Being asked by him for a comment, I modestly put forth the following:

"There would seem to be one defect in your set-up. You take young men from the rich dormitories of Princeton and Harvard and Yale, and you transport them straight into the panel office of Wall Street without ever a chance to find out what life is all about. A dollar or a hundred dollars or a hundred thousand dollars are just so many marks on a piece of white paper to them."

"No boy ought to be allowed to come into your trust company until he has just worked a year on a farm or as a section-hand on a railroad, or behind the counter of a country store. A dollar never again would be simply a mark on a piece of paper to him. It would mean a struggle and sacrifice and sweat."

The vice-president didn't pay any attention to the suggestion, of course, but I still think it was good. A great danger to this country comes from the lack of understanding between different sections and classes. I wish it were possible for every big city banker, lawyer and executive to change places at least once in seven with a small-town storekeeper, or a day laborer. It would be fine if every big board of directors had one place which would be filled by a farmer—a different one every year.

How much more humanity there would be in business if the men at the top could keep fresh their contact with the problems and hardships and heartaches of the ordinary man and woman.

Keep Right on Keeping On

Young people write asking: "How does one get into the advertising business?" Several successful advertising people recently joined their business autobiographies. Here are some samples:

1 Young man. Delivered newspapers. Erased boy. Chauffeur, stemming instructor, freight checker. Real estate salesman, life guard, salesman, advertising agency.

2 Young woman. Reception desk. Ass't. Credit Manager. Advertising department. Selling space, house-to-house selling. Clerk, newspaper subscriptions. Writing Advertising. Advertising agency.

3 Young man. Making and selling photographs. Picking strawberries. Selling soap products. Church janitor and organist. Debiting newspapers. Clerk, Railway Mail Service, collection agency. Editor, printing, free-lance writer.

4 E. F. private. Advertising agency.

You will note that no one found a job for any of these people; they just went around kicking at the doors until one opened. In the periods between jobs it never seems to have occurred to them to sit down with folded hands and complain that they were born too late. They just kept right on keeping on.

To Describe 4-H Fair Department

A complete description of the 4-H Department at the annual North Carolina State Fair will be given in a radio talk on the Carolina Farm Features program by L. R. Harrill, State club leader, Saturday, September 26.

Mr. Harrill believes that the information which he will give should be of great help to those boys and girls who are planning to enter exhibits in the Fair.

All club members are eligible to enter exhibits if they have been actively engaged in 4-H work during the current year. Prizes amounting to $2,333.50 will be awarded winners.

The farm boys will engage in judging seed and livestock. Each county will be allowed to enter a team composed of three members. The seed judging contest will take place October 16 at 10 a. m., and the livestock judging on the same day one hour later. Poultry judging teams will vie with one another the same day.

In addition there will be individual exhibits of swine, baby beef, corn, and calf exhibits.

The 4-H girls will enter food and clothing exhibits as their part of the competition.

Two community buildings and an agricultural building are being constructed in Hertford County by the Works Progress Administration.

Mrs. Cole Young, of Leesville, La., writes: "I was suffering with irregular periods. I had quite a bit of pain, which made me nervous. I took Cardui and found it helped me in every way, making me regular and stopping the pain. It quieted my nerves, making my health much better." If Cardui does not help YOU, consult a physician.
