SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By Charles E. Dunn

Finding Ourselves in Service. Lesson for Today: Mark 8:27-38. Golden Text: Mark 8:36.

"Whoever loses his life for my sake and the gospel's," said Jesus, in our lesson text, "will save it." This seems to be true with respect to causes in which we not only have a keen interest but the service of which brings rich and satisfying rewards. But is it true with respect to enterprises that yield little or no return in appreciation or gratitude? Or what is more to the point, can it be true for those who devote themselves intensely to what seems a worthy venture, only to suffer humiliation and defeat?

Here is an idealist who labors without stint to redeem an unsanitary, crowded slum, only to find in the end that the people prefer to have it remain in its filth. Or here is a saint who ministers for years without complaint to the needs of a querulous, self-centered relative who never deserved such sacrificial attention. Or here is a soldier who gives his life for a holy cause utterly trampled upon by ruthless dictators.

Certainly, self-denial is often very costly and ends in apparent failure. Jesus knew this full well. For our lesson contains the familiar saying, "If anyone wishes to follow me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross." Consider Robert Scott, dying on his homeward trek from the South Pole, but able to write, "We took risks; we knew we took them, and therefore we have no cause for complaint, but bow to the will of Providence, determined still to do our best to the last." But, thank God, that self-denial does not always end in disaster. Sir Wilfred Grenfell, who has rendered such notable service to the fisher folk of Labrador, insists that he dislikes to speak of self-sacrifice because he is not aware that he has ever practiced it. And Livingstone said that his labors for Africa were "emphatically no sacrifice," but rather "a privilege."

Nine meetings to demonstrate the possibilities of a simple water system for the farm home were concluded last week in Edgecombe county.

Jackson county farmers have purchased 544 tons of ground limestone cooperatively since last September.
