DEFERS

facilities are furnished by a municipality, the minimum size of a lot may be only 7,000 square feet.

The purpose of requiring certain standards in the construction of streets, Turner said, is to meet the requirements of the state highway commission in order that the department may take over the maintenance of streets when a division has been built up to the minimum requirements of the state, which is 5 persons to the mile. Another reason for the street requirements is for uniformity of a system so that adjoining subdivisions may be connected by a highway or streets. Minimum requirements are for streets or roads are that they must have a 60-foot-right-of-way, be 28 feet wide, and have a good base of crushed rock and or topsoil.

Turner said that street maintenance should be of great concern to those who bought lots in a subdivision, as some one must keep up the streets. He said that while sub-dividers are required to lay off streets according to regulations they are not required to maintain them. For this reason, Turner said, it is imperative that they meet requirements of the State Highway Commission.

Turner said that there is nothing in the regulations that would keep a property owner from selling a lot, or parcel of land, to an individual, and that the regulations only covered those developers of subdivisions who sold their lots from a map. He admitted that this would cause some confusion, but said that it could not be helped. He said that the purpose of the regulations, effective over the entire county, was to regulate authentic subdivision regulations.

recognized by Limer was Horace M. Johnson, chairman of the Meclenburg County, Va., Planning Board. He endorsed orderly planning of the reservoir.

Marvin Newsom, chairman of the Warren County Planning Board, pointed out the potential value of Gaston reservoir to Warren County, which, he said, had been described to him by an engineer as potentially the best lake in the eastern part of the United States. He said that if the reservoir is properly developed that it could mean the greatest hope for development that the county has ever experienced, and that it is expected that many citizens from other states would build homes on the lake, thus increasing the tax base for the county. But, he said, it is not likely that persons from other states would be encouraged to buy lots and build homes unless and until there is some orderly plans for the lake's development.

Hal Connell, contractor, and promoter of a subdivision in North Warrenton a few years ago, voiced a discordant note at the hearing, when he said that he opposed the subdivision regulations, principally on the grounds of the red tape involved and the added costs which would be necessary if requirements of the regulations are to be met. It would mean, he said, that many poor people would not be able to enjoy the advantages of the lake.

On the other hand, Hugh Holt, a member of the Board of Commissioners of the Town of Warrenton, said that his experience as a town commissioner had taught him that there should be regulations for all subdivisions, as such regulations at the beginning of such projects saved many later headaches.

Dennis Rose, former mayor of Littleton, said that he owned no land on the lake, but he favored the subdivision regulations because he feels that the orderly and planned development of the lake could mean much to the growth of the county.

Jimmy Burton of Warrenton suggested that a voluntary system might be tried before the adoption of any regulations. W. R. Drake, insurance executive and Mayor of Macon, spoke in favor of the adoption of the regulations as the most feasible way to obtain the maximum benefits from the Gaston Lake.

A number of others present, when called upon by Limer for expressions of opinions upon the adoption of the regulations, said they came to find out about the regulations and had formed no opinions, stressed the need for citizens making their views known concerning the adoption of the regulations.

Following the discussion, Limer called for a show of hands from those favoring the adoption of the regulations. Thirteen hands were raised. When Limer called for a show of hands of those opposing, only one hand was raised, as Connell opposed. Others present expressed no opinion.
