"WHAT TOBACCO VARIETY TO PLANT?"

On the minds of many farmers, there still remains the question of what variety of tobacco to plant. With the time for seeding plant beds near at hand, farmers should do some serious thinking, and consider producing quality as well as variety. Farmers should study carefully the many disease problems of tobacco in the county as well as the performance and results on their farms before reaching a decision as to what variety to plant.

In treating your plant beds, be sure to follow manufacturers' recommendations and observe the weather; it is advisable to wait for favorable weather for best results.

Remember, it has been proven to be a fact that you get better results by not seeding your plant bed too thick. In most instances, our seeds are better than the preparation and care given our plant beds. If properly prepared and handled, one-fourth ounce of seed per 100 square yards should do the job. Yes, some farmers are getting good results by using one-sixth ounce per 100 yards.

Thick seeding produces thick stands of weak, spindly transplants, and a poor stand in the fields. But moderate seeding encourages the growth of medium, bushy transplants which will get the crop off to a good start. Regardless of what variety you plant, make it a point not to over-seed your beds this year.

Farmers may secure bulletins entitled, "Tobacco Plant Production Guide," and additional tobacco information at the County Negro Agricultural Agents Office.
