

KILLS FIRST DEER—John Wilson Gibson, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Gibson of Warrenton, killed his first deer on last Saturday morning, the first time he ever shot at a deer. The 200-lb. buck deer was killed near the "Horseshoe," between Centerville and Essex, around 9 a. m. The boy used a single-barrel sawed-off shotgun, using buckshot. John Wilson and his father posed with the deer here Saturday morning.

Radio Telescope Probes Mysteries Of Jupiter

WASHINGTON — A giant new radio telescope may help solve some of the mysteries of the giant planet Jupiter. The 300-foot-wide electronic "dish" at Green Bank, West Virginia, recently detected in one day as many radio emissions from Jupiter as smaller instruments have recorded in a month.

Tuning in on radio signals from Jupiter is an astronomical innovation, the National Geographic Society says. Not until 1955 did astronomers learn that Jupiter was emitting long-wave radio signals.

It was a surprising discovery, because plants usually transmit only short waves generated by heat. The source of Jupiter's long waves still is unknown. Several theories are current.

Tremendous Storms
Astronomers have variously speculated that the signals emanate from tremendous electrical storms; from electrons trapped and energized by the planet's potent magnetic field; from the sun's effect on Jupiter's ionosphere; or from powerful disturbances deep within the planet itself.

In any case, the strength of the radio waves indicates enormous sources of energy—the equivalent of 10 large hydrogen bombs exploding every second. By the time the signals complete their half-billion-mile journey to earth, they sound like surf breaking on a pebbly beach. An English astrophysicist said that if the signals were being sent by "little men," they must have a "most monotonous hit parade."

Another mystery is the composition of the huge planet, which is bigger in mass and volume than all the solar-system planets put together. The equatorial diameter of Jupiter is 88,700 miles, compared to earth's 7,900 miles. Jupiter's vast globe could hold 1,300 earths, but it is only 300 times heavier.

Jupiter's relatively light weight suggests that a large part of the planet, perhaps all of it, consists of gas—but in forms, unknown on earth. One widely held theory holds that Jupiter is made up chiefly of hydrogen. Much of the gas is so compressed by tremendous pressure near the center of the planet that it is, in effect, a metal.

Another theory suggests that Jupiter has a rocky, metallic core 37,000 miles across, overlaid by an ice layer 17,000 miles thick, which in turn is covered by a heavy, ammonia-methane-hydrogen atmosphere.

Great Red Spot
Perhaps the greatest Jovian mystery is the Great Red Spot, an oval-shaped object in the southern half of the planet. When first observed in 1664, the spot was brick red and covered a bigger surface than the earth's circumference. Since then, astronomers have watched its color vary from salmon pink to a greenish white.

The spot seemingly is not attached to the solid portion of Jupiter and drifts like a huge raft in the sea. Astronomers believe it actually is a solid body suspended in Jupiter's dense atmosphere. It could be metallic hydrogen or solid helium. The Great Red Spot and other features of Jupiter will be pictured in the forthcoming atlas, "A Photographic Study of the Brighter Planets," produced by the Lowell Observatory of Flagstaff, Arizona, and the National Geographic Society. The atlas will reproduce detailed pictures of Jupiter and its relatively close neighbors—Mercury, Mars, Venus, and Saturn.
