His pines are growing in a natural environment, which they like. My colleagues in Forestry tell me that pines do not like grass. This has also been my observation. Neither do they like the high nitrogen level necessary to keep grass green and growing. They will respond to phosphorus and potash.

GARDEN TIME
M. E. Gardner
N. C. State College

A real good bulletin has just been released by the USDA which you should know about. The title: "Controlling Insects on Flowers." The bulletin covers the description and control of about 400 insects which attack flowers and is well illustrated with many illustrations in color. Attention is also called to the proper use of dusts and sprays, equipment, and precautions to observe when handling and applying insecticides.

The Bulletin is for sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, 25, D. C. The price is 40¢ per copy. If you wish to have for reference an authentic publication in a small package, I can highly recommend this one.

A Rockingham, N. C., reader, who was kind enough to give "Garden Time" a little boost, is having quite a problem with pine needles on his lawn. He has almost an acre, excluding the house site, in his lot and it is "full of pines." His question is how to control pine straw so that he can have both summer and winter grass.

I have written him for additional information relative to the kind(s) of pine trees in his lawn and the number. When I hear from him I will try to help.

I bring this question up because I have a friend who has a yard full of loblolly pines. He has solved his problem by making no attempt to have grass, and, in his case, it works real well. He doesn't have a weed problem either.

Around the house and in the side and backyard, he has very effectively used convex-leaf and detundifolia hollies, sasanna and japonica camellias and azaleas. Since all of his plants in his landscape plan are evergreen, some of them winter bloomers, he has color of either flower or foliage throughout
