Soil Test Leads To Good Growth
Mr. and Mrs. Otis Coleman of the Arcola Community took a soil test and it is truly paying dividends on the quality and quantity of their tobacco.
If your crop is not growing as well as it should, having a soil test made on the affected area can often aid in determining what is causing the poor growth, states L. C. Cooper, Negro Agricultural Extension Agent.
A new information sheet for soil samples from "problem areas" has been developed by the Soil Testing Division of the N. C. Department of Agriculture. The new sheet was developed to speed up processing of samples from problem areas and to give agronomists more information so as to better diagnose the reason for poor growth. Use of the new sheet which is now available at your County Extension Office will give priority to soil samples from problem areas. These samples will be processed and analyzed as rapidly as possible so that corrective measures can be applied to the growing crop.
Of course, not all problems resulted in poor crop growth are caused by the misuse or need for lime and/or fertilizer. Insect or disease infestations are often at fault. But if a nutritional deficiency of imbalance is suspected, a soil test can often aid in the diagnosis of the problem.
According to the Soil Testing Division, a large percentage of the samples from problem areas show a great need for lime. This is unfortunate since effective corrective liming measures are difficult to make once the crop is growing, Cooper said. Lime takes some time to react with the soil. It should be applied well in advance of planting time and thoroughly mixed with the soil for best results. By having your soil tested well in advance of planting your crop, lime and fertilizer needs can be determined early. If this is done, many of the problem areas showing poor growth can be prevented. A soil test is the best way to determine whether or not lime is needed. If lime is needed the soil test report will also indicate how much should be applied.
Lulu entered the dentist's office reluctantly, sitting in the chair, she nervously told the dentist:
"The thought of having a tooth extracted horrifies me. I don't know which I'd rather do—have a tooth pulled or have a baby."
"Well, make up your mind," the dentist said, "So I'll know how to adjust this chair."
