Wider Base Is Needed

We have no quarrel with the general purpose of Social Security and think the care afforded the elderly as a result of its creation makes it one of the finest social institutions ever created by our government. Neither do we have any criticism of the administration of the system under the rules set up by the Congress.

But we do have a definite quarrel with these rules under which the system operates and think the interpretation and administration of the system is an injustice to a large segment of our society.

It was our understanding, possibly mistakenly, that when the program was inaugurated it was an insurance program whereby laboring people could create a retirement fund, commensurate with the amount of payments they and their employers had paid into the fund. But many reaching 65 have found that this is not the case, and that although they have paid into the fund many thousands of dollars they can not obtain any benefits under the program, because earning necessary to maintain a decent standing of living is so much that the person becomes ineligible to receive any payments.

If Social Security is an insurance program, it seems to us that the insured person should be able to collect the full amount that his premiums have earned with no regard to his financial status. This would be the case were that person dealing with a private insurance company.

We also fail to find any fairness in a rule under which a person who is still making a real contribution to society through his labors can not draw social security, but that a person who draws his income through stocks, bonds and other investments can draw the full amount of his payments.

If Social Security is a worker's retirement insurance program then workers should be paid their full premiums at the retirement age whether they retire or choose to keep on working. If Social Security is a program to aid in the care of the elderly, then its cost should be borne by a general tax of all the people. It seems hardly fair to us that only workers and business men should be taxed to support a program that is intended for all the people, including retired persons with sufficient income from investments as not to be dependent upon all the premiums.

The Social Security system has proven its worth in its service to the older people of this nation, and incidentally has proven a boon to the economy in many of the poorer sections of the nation. Since the care of the elderly must be met in many cases through either welfare or social security payments, we think that it might be well for the government to make social security payments to all the people over 65 and to levy a general tax for its payment.

Social Security withholding taxes have already reached a 8.8 per cent mark, with promise that it will still be further increased. Of this amount 4.4% is paid by employers and has become a real burden on business. Actually, since wages must be based on a take-home basis, the business men of the nation find themselves for all real purposes bearing the entire cost of the program. A tax of nearly 10 per cent on businesses of the country has become a real problem, and with other taxes it is becoming increasingly hard for the small business man to conduct a successful business. Certainly it is a factor in the rising cost of living.

The Social Security system, in our opinion, needs a thorough study and revamping and a much wider base than is provided by the working people of this country.

Telephone Co. Warns Firms About Claims

Carolina Telephone yesterday cautioned local business subscribers not to make payments to a Los Angeles firm in the belief that such payments will apply to telephone directory Yellow Page advertising.

Howard Pitts, area commercial manager for Carolina Telephone, stated that a large number of local business firms have recently received mail resembling bills for "classified directory" listings. "These mailings are not from Carolina Telephone," he warned, "and we hope none of our subscribers or advertisers will send the requested $57 believing this material to come from us."

Pitts added that the telephone company has heard from Hill Directory Company, publisher of many City Directories . in this area, and that they are quite concerned about the possibility of a misunderstanding also.

The mailings involved carry a return address of Classified Directory Publishing Company, P. O. Box 25967, Los Angeles, California, and they invite checks to be made payable in that manner in the amount of $57. The telephone manager said that the matter is being called to the attention of Postal Authorities, irst, he developed the incandescent lamp. Then, he established the nation's first electric company -an investor-owned utility in New York City.

That was back in 1882. It served 59 customers, had a total generating capacity of 720 kilowatts and charged 25 cents per kilowatt-hour of service.

Today, as one of the nation's more than 300 investor-owned electric companies, CP&L serves half-a-million customers, has a generating capacity in excess of two million kilowatts and receives from residential customers an average price of 1.74 cents for a kilowatthour of electricity.

Service has improved greatly since the days of Edison's first plant. Then, customers who were lucky enough to have electricity received service for only two or three hours a day. And the electric light was the main electric "appliance." Today, electricity is on the job every hour of every day, putting to work more than 166 household helpers.

On this 120th anniversary of Edison's birth, we at CP&L are still heeding his advice: "There's a way to do it better. Find it." It helps us keep your electric service the biggest bargain in town.
