Support Little League

We offer our congratulations to the sponsors and supporters of the Little League baseball teams which opened their summer session here on Monday with some 150 boys out for play.

This, we think, is organized play at its best, giving small boys wholesome activity while teaching good sportsmanship, the need for cooperation, and the importance of getting along with their comrades, and a sense of belonging.

Like most good things, Little League play here just didn't happen: back of it has been good planning, a sense of dedication to youth, and much hard work. A number of adults, who could otherwise be employed, are giving their spare time, and sometime more, day after day to keep the Little League functioning. They are serving as coaches, umpires, managers, with their only reward being the consciousness that they are working for the development of youth and their principal happiness being close association with a fine group of young boys.

There are other adults in the town and surrounding area who are unable to give of their time, but who have given of their means, in many cases providing uniforms for an entire team, and giving their moral support as well as their financial support to a community effort. So long as this spirit exists here there is hope for Warrenton and Warren County.

We hope that the general public will support the Little League by attending as many of the games as possible. Many may be surprised at the fun they will have; but of more importance, their attendance gives young boys in their formative years a sense of approval and of being an important part of their community, very important elements in character building.

This Bill Offers Little

A news article reaching our desk on Tuesday morning announced that Appalachian Teachers College was applying for university status under the regional university bill being debated this week in the General Assembly. Should the bill be enacted a number of other colleges in the State, including East Carolina College, are expected to ask for such status.

Under the bill the schools would be restricted from awarding doctorates, and would serve for a five-year trial period under this restriction. Admittedly, the bill is a political expediency and in truth it seems to us that it offers little in the true meaning of a real university.

Our small office dictionary gives the following definition of a university: "Institute of learning of the grade. A university usually has schools of law, medicine, teaching, business, etc., and in the United States colleges for general instruction as well."

Giving East Carolina College and Appalachian Teachers College, both fine colleges, the name university is not going to give them "the schools of law, medicine, teaching, business, etc.," or the large library and prestige faculty associated with and a part of a true university. Neither is it likely that the name alone will attract grants for research in a school without facilities for research. Most of the grants made to colleges in the United States

Carolina, but at every true university, is repugnant to many who feel that students should be under strict discipline, and that they should be taught only the "right ideas." But, as the Encyclopedia Britannica says:

"In certain places . . . emphasis is given to the idea that college study is disciplinary, requiring definite, but not uniform methods, and a certain deference to the authority of a master; while university training is much freer, and the scholar is encouraged to inquire rather than accept; to test and observe rather than to hear and recite; to walk with a friendly guide rather than to obey a commander. This distinction is not universally recognized . . . So that older men are often heard asking, 'What is the difference between a college and a university?' But generally it is admitted that college training is one thing, and work in a university is another."

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear daddy, Robert Holt Shearin, who departed this life October 20, 1966. God entered our home that day when we were not watching you see, He called our daddy away To rest in Heaven with Thee.

It is so hard to understand Just why these things must be. We know we will meet again some day When we are called by Thee.

We'll be your sweet girls You kissed good-bye that day. You went to work—we went to school Then your life was taken away.

You always did so much for us. You wanted your girls to have the best. When we asked you to play with us, You did altho you needed rest.

Oh! Daddy our home is broken We know you are happy up there. Where your big smile is smiling, And your sweet voice fills the air.

You were that kind of person It is so wonderful to know. We miss you and shed our tears Dear Daddy as each day comes and goes.

The flowers on your grave our Daddy Will wither and decay. But the love we hold for you, Will never fade away.

Sleep peacefully dear Daddy, Oh! it is joy to breathe your name. In life we loved you oh so much In death we do the same.

This is not the end, dear Daddy There is more that we could say, We will always remember and love you, And now it is Happy Father's Day.

BRENDA, KAYE, FAYE, His daughters.

It's not easy to face up to this very unpleasant subject.

The possibility of your own death is simply a fact of life. You probably have great plans for your family's future. And we'd like to show you some of ours.

FATHER'S DAY

In honor of Father, who left us the 23rd of April, 1967.

WE ARE NEVER ALONE

Sometime everything goes wrong, No matter what we do, And the sky's so dark above us Not a ray of sun comes through; That's when most of us remember Something that we have always known— There is one Friend who never leaves us To endure it all alone; One who helps us bear our burdens, One who listens when we pray And gently leads us 'till we reach A brighter, happier day. We miss you, Daddy. THE CHILDREN OF H. A. WRIGHT
