Rhoads Is Speaker At Athletic Banquet

Ray Rhoads, for many years a successful coach and now athletic director of the State Department of Public Instruction at Raleigh, was the principle speaker at the Norlina High School Athletic Banquet held in the school cafeteria on last Friday night. Rex Gordon, principal of the school, was master of ceremonies.

Rhoads, presented by Principal Gordon as a "friend of long standing", entertained the group of boys and girls with his experiences as a coach and his ideas on just what athletics should mean to the player.

The speaker said there was more genuine happiness found in sports than in any other endeavor he knows about. He said that while winning was and should be the desire of all athletes, that winning is not the most important thing. To do one's best, he said, is what counts, and when one does one's best, and gives his all, he is a winner, although the record books show one lost.

"So often, the speaker said, by the time we learn to play the game, we are too old to play." If you do your best there is no disgrace in losing, he repeated.

Mrs. Rhoads accompanied her husband to Norlina and was presented by Principal Gordon, who also presented other guests.

The country ham dinner was served by the Home Economics officers, the members and guests were served lemonade and saltines during a social hour.
