Soda Jerker's Habitat Is Threatened

WASHINGTON—That "old faithful" of Main Street, the drug store soda fountain, is drying up.

Changing times and tastes have taken the fizz out of this once great American institution. Across the country, drug stores are ripping out their soda fountains as money losers.

In their places go plastic-topped lunch counters, show cases jammed with beauty aids, or displays of lawn furniture. New drug stores bulge like a bazaar, but banish the nostalgic fragrances of cherry syrup and root beer.

Soda fountain regulars now buy their soft drinks, ice cream, and chocolate topping at the neighborhood supermarket and take them home, sometimes concocting their own specialties with kitchen blenders, the National Geographic Society says.

Casualties Mount

Calorie counting has also taken casualties among the soda fountain faithful who appreciated a meaningful malted or banana split sticky with sweet delight.

These and other mouth-watering offerings evolved through more than 100 years of inspired experimenting, stretching back to when man first learned how to make soda water.

This is nothing but pure water changed with carbonic acid gas, or carbon dioxide, which gives it a bubbling sparkle.

But spurting from springs and with nature frequently adding minerals, the fizzy water was hailed as an elixir by 19th century enthusiasts.

Some 200 years ago chemists learned how to "impregnate" water with the gas. In the United States in the 1830's a John Mathews of New York City sold the first soda water generators.

Cathedral Chips In

Chips of marble—much of it salvaged from the builders of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York—were added to sulphuric acid in a lead-lined iron box. This produced the gas, which was then dissolved in cool, clear water, making soda water.

Many a general store counter soon boasted a soda-water generator or fountain complete with steady customers. But they drank it—hot as well as cold—only in the loyal belief that it was good for what ailed them.

It took a Philadelphia perfume maker, Eugene Roussel, to make it taste good. He added fruit flavoring and soon soda water was being laced with extracts of orange, teaberry, sarsaparilla and birch beer. Gustavus Dows built a generation in Italian marble for his emporium in Massachusetts, touching off a craze in decorations that ran through Gothic, Byzantine, Roman, Egyptian, and Japanese styles.

Next, the entire counter was marbleized, fronted by stools, and backed by mirrors and pyramids and balanced glasses and fruit.

Vanilla ice cream added to soda water—as an improvised substitute for shaved ice—was an instant hit. Soon the ice cream soda led a gooey repertoire of soda fountain specialties produced by that virtuoso of the ice cream scoop, the soda jerk—now, like the drug store cowboy, a vanishing American in danger of losing his native habitat, the drug store soda fountain.

Summer days are fast slipping away and soon the school bells will be ringing. It's appropriate to celebrate August as Sandwich Month and to enjoy those last few lazy days with a minimum of time in the kitchen. But the need for nutritive meals does not take a vacation. The men in the family still want foods that stick to the ribs. Team up tall glasses of frosty cold milk, crispy fresh North Carolina vegetables or fruits, and a hearty sandwich then start eating.

Welcome to the Club! Did you say what club? You are invited to try spectacular club sandwiches. Eat them with a knife and fork or by hand but do join the devotees of club sandwiches.

TENNIS CLUB—Toast waffles (frozen or homemade). Butter. On first waffle add lettuce, shrimp salad, Cheddar cheese; on second waffle put sliced turkey, tomato and blue cheese. Top with waffle. That's what Tennis Clubs are made of.

TURF CLUB—On buttered whole wheat bread put lettuce, salad dressing, roast beef, sliced onion and crumbled blue cheese. On second bread slice add your favorite sliced cheese and cole slaw. Top with bread and call it a Turf Club.

YACHT CLUB—Slice French bread in three parts. Butter. Fill bottom layer with lettuce, Swiss cheese, salami, dill pickles; fill second layer with lettuce, Cheddar cheese, tomato and bologna. Top with bread. You've just launched a Yacht Club.

BASEBALL CLUB—Cut sesame seed bun in three parts. On bottom slice spread butter, sour cream and mustard, add lettuce, liver sausage and Cheddar cheese. On second buttered slice put crisp bacon, Cheddar cheese and sliced onion. Top with buttered bun slice, and enjoy a swingin' Baseball Club.
