Men Given Hearing On Murder Charge

William McLean Davis and Joe Edward Hampton, Jr., appeared in the mixed session of district court on Friday to answer charges of murder, larceny from person and larceny of an automobile following their arrest for the murder of Cleveland Wilson, Judge Claude W. Allen, Jr., of Oxford, presided over the session.

The court found probable cause in the felony charges and ordered the men to appear at the next criminal session of Superior Court to answer charges. The court also took into consideration that the defendants have relatives out of state and that they went to Richmond, Va., on the night of the murder and denied counsel motion for bond. A bondsman for Joe Hampton, Jr., was relieved of bond obligations upon his request.

In other cases tried on Friday, the following were disposed of:

Earl Boyd, possession of weapon of death and destruction, voluntary dismissal.

Tommy Glenn Burton, speeding 70 in 55 mph zone, called and failed. Ordered arrested for appearance on March 4 with bond set at $200.

Frank Crews, worthless check, called and failed. Ordered arrested for appearance on Feb. 25 with bond set at $300 and subpoena issued for prosecuting witness.

Marie Rose Davis, failure to drive right of highway, fined $35 and court costs.

James Allen Hargrove, trespass, court costs.

Willie Albert Hargrove, speeding 65 in 55 mph zone, prayer for judgment continued upon payment of court costs.

Moses Lee Hendrick, shoplifting, not guilty.

Most Cold-Hit Grains Should Show Recovery

The North Carolina small grain crop is in only poor to fair condition as a result of the severe winter, but permanent damage isn't expected to be serious.

"There are both good and bad factors involved in the effects of cold temperatures on small grain," comments Ron Jarrett, North Carolina State University extension agronomist.

"There is going to be some permanent damage. I don't think there is any doubt about that. But my guess right now is that the damage isn't going to be severe, and the crop will actually benefit in some ways from the extended cold period."

The NCSU specialist contrasted this year's record cold with the abnormally warm weather of last winter. Given a choice between those two conditions, this winter's cold is probably better, generally, for small grain.

Diseases were a problem last year, and one reason was the early start they got as a result of the early warm weather. Jarrett believes there is a good chance that diseases will be less severe this year.

The specialist suggested that small grain farmers shouldn't give up on their crops at this stage, although the usually green plants in many cases have been turned brown by the bitter cold and appear to be lost. Jarrett thinks most of them will recover.

One safeguard that he urges is delayed applications of nitrogen topdressing. Putting this fertilizer on too early could cause the plants to put on quick new growth, making them highly susceptible to damage by extremely low temperatures.

"I think it would be better to delay topdressing until late February or until around the first week of March," he said. "The risks of damage would be less this way." on the other hand, farmers should also recognize that thawing, wet soil could become a problem in getting into fields late.

The NCSU specialist said the extent of cold damage to small grains in the state can't be determined at this time. "We should know pretty well the extent of it by the end of February. I would remind farmers that these cool season crops have a great ability to withstand cold and bounce back. I would be very hesitant to give up on them too quickly."

Those that are mostly likely to have suffered damage are fields that were seeded very early, such as might be the case where a tobacco farmer, for example, seeded small grain as a cover crop immediately after completing tobacco harvest.

This early planted small grain is likely to have put on excessive early growth and become susceptible to cold weather damage.

That grain seeded very late is also in trouble. The problem in this case was the early on-set of winter last November and the adverse effect it had on getting stands established.

"The best policy, I believe, is to be patient," said Jarrett, "delay nitrogen applications and give the crops a chance to come out when temperatures begin to moderate."
