Tobacco Weigh-In Regulations Off

Regulations requiring tobacco to be weighed in at the warehouse within 48 hours of sale have been repealed in emergency action by the North Carolina Board of Agriculture. It came as a result of hardships caused to all segments of the tobacco industry.

In announcing the change, Commissioner of Agriculture Jim Graham noted that the present marketing system for tobacco is not conducive to this requirement. "The various and sundry markets, some with sales every day and others less frequently, cause many problems when the tobacco cannot be put on the floor until 48 hours before the sale," Graham said. "The tobacco farmer is pushed to the limit in getting everything done during the tobacco harvest and sales season. It is essential that he move his crop to the sales warehouse in between priming, and the multitude of other jobs that must be done this time of year," Graham continued. "This often means hauling the tobacco to the warehouse at night and on weekends.

"The problem is compounded by the dry weather we are now experiencing when additional labor is required for moving irrigation pipe and other things.

"The concept of weighing tobacco as close to the time of sale as possible is a good one but the regulation as written caused undue hardships," Graham concluded.

The emergency repeal is effective until September 1, at which time the Board of Agriculture will give the matter further consideration.
