Farming Energy

Using 3 Percent

Of National Total

The nation's farmers are attempting to reduce total consumption of energy both as a cost-cutting and an energy-conserving measure. Their success may help cut farming costs but it will do little to reduce the nation's total energy requirement.

The reason is simple. Agriculture uses only about 3 per cent of the total energy required by the nation. Any reduction by farmers would only be a "drop in the bucket."

North Carolina uses about 66 million gallons of diesel fuel, 632 million cubic feet of natural gas and 143 million gallons of LP gas, plus various amounts of electricity, fuel oil and coal, in agricultural production.

Flue-cured tobacco uses about 42 per cent of the fossil energy used in North Carolina agricultural production, followed distantly by corn and soybeans, according to North Carolina State University extension economists.

Nationally, the largest users of fossil energy are corn, winter wheat, cotton, soybeans and alfalfa, in that order. Together these commodities account for over half of the total farm energy usage.

The most energy-intensive crops (requiring the most energy per acre or unit of production) was flue-cured tobacco, citrus crops, shade tobacco, apples and peaches, in that order.

Of the total amount of energy used in production agriculture in the U.S. 30 per cent is used for field machinery, 25 per cent for transportation, 20 per cent for irrigation, 12 per cent for livestock, dairy and poultry production, 8 per cent for crop drying and 5 per cent for miscellaneous uses.

The 1 billion gallons of lubricating oil discarded annually would fill a tank 90 feet across and one mile high.

Artist's Sketch Of Proposed New HealthCo Facility

Groundbreaking Date Is Set For New Permanent Home Of HealthCo

Groundbreaking ceremonies for a new facility to house HealthCo, Inc., a rural health clinic located in Soul City, have been scheduled for October 26 at 3 p. m.

A host of local and state dignitaries are scheduled to be on hand when the first shovel of dirt is turned for HealthCo's first permanent facility.

Now housed in double-wide trailers in the new community, HealthCo in August purchased a 1.38-acre tract in Soul City. The purchase was made possible through a donation by the New York Life Insurance Company channeled through the Soul City Foundation.

The groundbreaking ceremony will mark official construction of a 5,300-square-foot ambulatory health center.

Scheduled to participate in the program will be Dr. Archie Johnson, North Carolina Memorial Hospital; Attorney Floyd B. McKisick, president of the Soul City Company; D. Lee Rudd, Project Support Division, New Communities Administration, Department of Housing and Urban Development; W. P. Jones, chairman, Warren County Commissioners; Patrick McGuckin, national project analyst, Department of Health, Education and Welfare; Mrs. Varah Brown, chairperson, Groundbreaking Committee; Father Frank Maloney of Dunn, and Hubert Avent, executive director of HealthCo.

HealthCo, which began delivery services in 1974, is designed to deliver medical, dental and other health services aimed at the prevention of illness and the maintenance of good health, including a certified home health agency. HealthCo has two full-time physicians, one part-time OBGYN and one full-time dentist, in addition to ancillary staff.

Approximately 50 patients visit the clinic daily. Everyone is eligible for services regardless of race, sex, age or income. Patients pay based upon their ability to pay which is determined by family size and income. All residents of Warren and Vance counties are eligible.

The public is invited to attend the groundbreaking ceremony at Soul City, Avent said.

MEXICAN FLAVOR...A few of the millions of tortillas produced weekly at food plant in San Antonio, Tex., whiz by watchful eyes of Olivia Hernandez. Americans are expected to consume about three billion stone-ground tortillas this year as the popularity of Mexican cooking booms. Tortillas are an indispensable part of dishes such as tacos, tostadas, and enchiladas.
