The world's largest Buddhist monument is the 1,200-year-old shrine of Borobudur on Indonesia's island of Java. A stepped pyramid more than 100 feet high, it took about 80 years to build. Saving it has been one of the most complex and technically advanced historic preservation projects ever undertaken. With the aid of a computer, more than 800,000 stones were removed, cleaned, treated, and then put back where they belonged, National Geographic reports.
