Henderson Armory Is Site Of Reunion

Descendants of Wilbur Primus, Emma Williams and Henrietta Boyd Jones held their 25th family reunion on July 24 at the Henderson Armory.

The president of the family group, Calvin Jones, extended greetings and gave opening remarks, while Wilbur P. Boyd served as master of ceremonies for the occasion.

The theme for the gathering was "The Ten Commandments for Success," which was discussed by Dr. Robert E. Jones, Jr., a family member. Other highlights included musical selections by the Carolina Neal, Carson Jones and Mary L. Davis families.

A Share and Tell Hour was led by Casper Jones and Mrs. Barbara Burwell Edgerton led a memorial service.

Ms. Cheryl Jones recognized Henry Hudgins as the oldest member, Gregory Taylor, Jr. as the youngest member, and the Rev. Spencer Davis, Mrs. Hattie Davis Allen and Joseph Jones, Jr. as having travelled the greatest distance.

Approximately 200 family members and friends attended. Dinner was prepared by family members.

First Teacher Is Parent Of Child

Children begin learning at birth, and the knowledge they pick up in infancy helps shape the rest of their lives. Fortunately, this important learning doesn't take expensive nursery equipment or require parents to go back to college.

"Most every home and family has the things needed for a child to move ahead educationally. It is just a matter of taking time and knowing how to use them," says Wanda Hardison, Harnett County home economics extension agent.

She offers the following suggestions for parents of infants 0.3 months old:

—Respond to crying promptly. This builds his feelings of trust and security.

—Rock and hold the baby gently, talk to him and smile often. "He likes to move and feel the touch of your skin and body. Talk in a pleasant voice, and smile at him frequently, now and throughout life. This gives him a feeling of security and helps him begin to feel good about himself," the extension agent says.

—Place the baby on his stomach, so he can practice holding his head up. As he gets older, hold something interesting for him to look at to encourage him.

—Around the fourth week, he may be interested in a mobile placed to the far right and 5-to-8 inches above him. Choose a mobile with bold contrasting colors which looks interesting from underneath.

—Change his scenery. Carry him around the house, or put him in an infant carrier and place him in different rooms with you. This helps him become aware of sound, sight and color. He needs to hear his parents' voices and many different household noises. This helps him develop listening skills, which will help him in learning to talk and read later in life.

Parents need to remember that these early "lessons" will be brief. All children have short attention spans, but babies may only be interested for a few minutes or a few seconds. Keep activities relaxed and enjoyable.
