Hold the Salt

Almost all of us consume more salt than we really need. The body can normally get along just fine with less than a fourth of a teaspoon a day. There is no problem with excess salt in many people. The kidneys filter it out safely. It seems that some people are inclined to develop high blood pressure and extra salt becomes a contributing factor. The safest general rule is to cut back.

Husband: "Thank you for the nice necktie."
Wife: "Oh, that's nothing to thank me for."
Husband: "That's what I thought."

Studies To Draw

Norlina Man

James Phillip Lewis of Forest Lane, Norlina, is a member of the six-student class which will begin studies at the Maria Parham Hospital School of Medical Technology on September 6.

Lewis, 36, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Lewis of Norlina. He is married and has two children.

A 1965 graduate of Norlina High School, Lewis has earned a medical laboratory assistant diploma from W.W. Holding Technical Institute in Raleigh. He has worked as a laboratory technician at Warren General Hospital and as a production supervisor for blood, serum and plasma products at Granite Diagnostics in Warrenton.

The School of Medical Technology has been conducted at Maria Parham Hospital since 1966 and has graduated 49 laboratory technicians. The two-year school is accredited by a national education organization and, upon completion of the school, graduates are qualified to take a national examination to become registered laboratory technicians. More than 98 percent of the school's graduates have passed the exam and received national certification.
