RAYNAUD'S DISEASE
Patients with an uncomfortable circulatory disorder called Raynaud's Syndrome are advised by a Vermont doctor to swing their arms like a windmill. Observing the success of skiers in warming up cold hands by whirling their arms, he has his patients swing the affected arm briskly at about 80 revolutions per minute. Whitened fingers usually regain their circulation and color within a minute of "windmilling", says Dr. Donald R. McIntyre of Rutland, Vermont.
