Get Ready Now

When frost has put an end to this year's garden, it's time to get things ready for the next one.

Two jobs that should be done are cleanup and soil test.

A thorough cleanup disposing of all vines and other crop and weed residues - is important. Even more important is the soil test, and this is one that many home gardeners overlook.

No need to wait until frost to do this - the earlier the better.

Testing the soil determines its acidityalkalinity or pH. North Carolina soils generally are acid, and this acidity builds up over the years as organic matter and acidforming fertilizers are added.

Lime is needed to correct soil and bring it to the desirable pH. Determining whether or not your garden soil needs lime and how much it needs is done by taking a soil sample and sending it to the N. C. Department of Agriculture's soil testing laboratory in Raleigh. The service is free.

You will need a soil sample box and a form to accompany it. These may be obtained from county offices of the Agricultural Extension Service. There's an office in every county in North Carolina.

In taking your soil sample with a shovel, slice straight down through the soil to a depth of around eight inches. You may want to collect two or three les from different locations. Mix this soil in a bucket and then fill your soil sample box from the mixed soil. This should give you an average of the entire plot.
