Closing Of Hospital Delayed

One of the organizations, Community Memorial Hospital of South Hill, Va., was represented at the hospital board meeting last Wednesday. The hospital's administrator, Tom Leggett, outlined a preliminary plan which would offer a variety of services, among them an urgent care center offering emergency services, an acute care facility and skilled care facility, consultation services through doctors on staff at Community Memorial, and surgical procedures which could be performed under local anesthetic. Leggett emphasized that the plan called for providing help in every department of the hospital, from bookkeeping to housekeeping.

Eddie Clayton, member of a committee appointed to explore options for operating the hospital, reported that preliminary talks with Maria Parham Hospital had indicated that the Henderson hospital wished "to be good neighbors and would be happy to treat the county's patients at Maria Parham."

Also present at the Wednesday meeting was Dr. Cynthia Krishna, National Health Corps physician currently on staff at HealthCo, who expressed interest on behalf of a group of four doctors, including herself, in purchasing the hospital and disbursing stock to employees and interested citizens. In addition to Dr. Krishna, Dr. Donald Coffman, local physician, Dr. Thomas Hunter, one of the physicians currently serving the needs of the emergency room at Warren General, and Dr. George Patis, podiatrist on the HealthCo staff, have indicated their interest in assuming management of the hospital as a private concern. Dr.

Krishna indicated that the doctors' group would be willing to take over the hospital at whatever date it would be available, before or after renovation.

A major concern of the trustees at their meeting was that investigation be made and steps be taken to ensure that the hospital license is maintained to allow for a smooth transition into whatever interim or long-term plan may be adopted.
