Public Hearing Is Scheduled On Course Of Study

The State Board of Education has announced a public hearing on the revised North Carolina Standard Course of Study scheduled for March 29 in Raleigh.

The hearing will be held in the State Board Meeting Room on the third floor of the Education Building on Salisbury Street, according to a recent release from the State Department of Public Instruction.

The release stated that copies of the Standard Course of Study are available for review by the public at the Warren County Schools Central Office on Cousin Lucy's Lane in Warrenton and in the Regional Education Center in Knightdale.

The proposed Standard Course of Study specifies subjects and skills to be taught at each grade level in the public schools and is an overview of the basic curriculum which should be made available to every child in the public schools of North Carolina. It includes the areas of arts education, communication skills, healthful living, library/media skills, mathematics, science, second languages, social studies, student services and vocational education.

The foreheads of the Dinka women of southern Sudan are heavily scarred to symbolize the horns of cattle, which the tribe consider beautiful as well as vital to their existence, says National Geographic.

'Chicken Day' Top Event For Students

By ANN KILIAN
Warren County Schools
Child Nutrition Director

The aroma of fresh baked rolls and fried chicken may greet you as you enter any local elementary school on "chicken day," which is a favorite meal of Warren County students. Participation is high in these schools, around 95 percent for lunch and 60 percent for breakfast. All six elementary schools serve the basic menu, with three schools, North Warren, Vaughan and Hawkins offering some choice to grades four through six.

Parent days are also popular for elementary-aged children. Each school manager invites parents at some time during the year to a special meal to be eaten with the children. In some schools the parents are served buffet-style, while in others parents go through the line with their children. School lunches aren't generally available to the public but parents are urged to visit on special parent days.

Teachers and students help make the cafeterias attractive places. Bulletin boards, table decorations, and wall murals featuring seasonal and nutritional motifs brighten the eating areas.

NETP, which stands for Nutrition Education Training Program, comes under the Child Nutrition program and since 1979 has provided a vast amount of timely nutrition materials to teachers and managers. All elementary schools in Warren County have participated in the program, an option offered by the state. To participate, teachers attended basic nutrition information classes taught by the Child Nutrition director and other nutritionists. As a result of attending the training, each teacher received valuable nutrition materials to correlate in classroom activities. Small appliances such as fry pans, toaster ovens and small utensils were supplied for teachers to use in nutrition activities in the classroom.

Tasting parties teach good nutrition in a fun way. Children have learned to eat fresh cauliflower and broccoli by tasting them raw with a dip. Fresh pineapple is an unfamiliar fruit that many children have tasted through the lunchrooms' nutrition program. During Dental Health month students were taught that carrot and celery sticks make a good snack.

Most elementary schools have a birthday dinner each month. Children with birthdays during that month receive cake and ice cream and, in some schools, sit at a special table. The efficient managers for the six elementary schools have all completed eight management courses offered through the state Child Nutrition office and the state Community College system and are members of the State and National School Food Service Association. The managers and schools are: Mrs. Ella Cook, Mariam Boyd; Mrs. Minnie White, Northside; Mrs. Willie Mae Williams, Vaughan; Mrs. Florence Somerville, South Warren; Mrs. Mattie Hawkins, North Warren; and Mrs. Ethel Harris, Hawkins Elementary School. All six have served Warren County Schools for a combined total of 162 years.

Special Week Slated

Governor James G. Martin has proclaimed the week of April 1-6 as "Environmental Awareness Week" in North Carolina, according to David Harrison of the Warren Soil and Water Conservation Office.

The wise conservation of our land and water resources is vital and every citizen has an interest in protecting the land and water that is needed for future growth," Harrison said. "Each year, we lose thousands of acres of prime farm and forest land across the state to non-farm uses. Soil erosion robs our productive farms and fills our rivers and streams with sediment," he added.

Encouraging people to be better stewards of our land and water resources is the goal of the 1985 North Carolina Environmental Awareness Week, the conservationist reported. The Warren Soil and Water Conservation District joins with North Carolina's 93 other Soil and Water Conservation Districts in observing Environmental Awareness Week.

This district has a no-till planter available for farmers to rent, Harrison said. "No-till" is a proven practice that protects the land.

Cost-sharing on conservation practices is also available. These practices include no-till, stripcropping, terraces, sod waterways and converting marginal cropland to pasture or trees, according to Harrison.
