Planning On Buying Vehicle At Tent Sale, Better Hurry

If you're planning to buy a new car at an automobile "tent sale," you'd better hurry, because the events are about to become history.

North Carolina Motor Vehicles Commissioner William S. Hiatt announced Thursday that franchise automobile dealers across the state will no longer be permitted to hold off-premises, special-event or "tent" sales after May 31, ending a controversy that has divided dealers sharply for more than one year.

Hiatt's announcement followed a ruling by the Attorney General's Office that state law provides no authority for the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles to permit such sales off the property of the licensed dealers. The ruling had been requested by Hiatt after complaints by some dealers that their franchised sales area had been encroached upon by other dealers.

Starting June 1, dealers must apply for and obtain a separate license to operate a supplemental sales lot, bringing to an end the reign of current regulations that permit dealers to operate special sales if they notify the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles at least 24 hours before the event.

"Originally, the regulation was intended to allow franchise dealers to sell new vehicles that were put on display at malls or shopping centers during the time of year when models changed," Hiatt explained. "It was really designed to be a promotion, but one that was not so restrictive as to prevent a sale."

Hiatt said the creative use of the current regulation caused problems that "became so severe that the Division of Motor Vehicles had to seek an opinion on how to resolve them."

been determined. The house is considered a total loss, with damages estimated at $20,000 or more.

Early Wednesday morning, a storage building and tractor shed located on the property of Mrs. Pett Burwell, one mile south of Warrenton off U. S. 401, was reported to be on fire by a passerby. The Warrenton Rural Fire Department was called to the scene at approximately 12:42.

According to Walter Gardner, when firefighters arrived at the residence, the storage building and tractor shed were engulfed in flames. A tractor located inside the tractor shed, along with some other equipment, was destroyed in the fire.

The value of the building was set at approximately $5,000, while the value of the tractor was set at $10,000.

No cause of the fire has been determined, but it is believed that the flames could have been caused by some welding work that had been performed earlier that day in the storage building.

Parham Planning May Graduation

Pattern Saver

If your favorite pattern is so worn that it's beginning to fall apart, press it onto fusible interfacing. There are several products on the market for this purpose.

The children and staff at Northside Elementary School recently participated in a balloon launch to help celebrate Media Day at the school. Each balloon had a special message written on it. Attached to each balloon was a card with the partic-pant's name and school address. Anyone who finds a balloon is asked to return the card attached to the school. The teachers are charting locations of the balloons on a map.
