NEWS ITEMS REPORTED FROM RALEIGH TODAY

(Special to The Sentinel.)
RALEIGH, Sept. 4.—Judge Purnell in the federal court heard argument today and made an order in the bankruptcy case of C. D. Rigsbee, railroad contractor of Durham. The order was to the effect that if the trustee, J. E. Bowling, thinks it advisable he can bring a lot of forty odd head of horses and mules from Virginia into this State and sell them as assets of the bankrupt. Trustee Bowling was represented in the argument by J. A. Giles and the creditors had Guthrie & Guthrie as counsel.
 The First Baptist church, colored, held practically all day services Sunday in their new church at the southeast corner of capital square, it being the first service ever held in the new church. $87.49 was raised during the day, $731.79 being for the completion of the auditorium and $71.70 for incidental expenses. The services were held in the basement of the church. The auditorium will not be completed for some time yet.

STATE'S OLDEST EDITOR.

Major Bernard and The Daily Star—Got First Experience on "The Star Spangled Banner."
 Raleigh News and Observer.
 Major W. H. Barnard, veteran editor of the excellent Wilmington Star, was pleasantly in Raleigh last week. The Star, over whose destinies Major Barnard has presided since he established it in 1867, is the oldest daily paper in the State and the Major himself is certainly the oldest newspaper man in point of service in the daily field and unless "Father Creedy" has not retired, in the weekly field also. During all the years The Star has kept the tenor of its way conservatively and usefully. There has never been a better exponent of sincere journalism in the State.
 The Star's editor is full of reminiscences of a life which has been packed with experience and struggle. Since his early adolescence he has been identified with newspaper work; in Texas, after an intermission during the war on the Fayetteville Presbyterian—a religious paper with a secular department—with the old Wilmington Dispatch and, finally, with the Star.
 In 1855 Major Barnard went to Texas with the intention of becoming a lawyer and studied there for a while under a famous politician, who in the manner of his day had an organ. There was another politician in the same neck of woods or thereabouts, and he, also, had his organ. When the campaign came on, the rivals left the town of Henderson and each left his organ with an aspiring young man. Major Barnard's politician had named his organ the "Star Spangled Banner" and the future editor of the Star, who was not then so conservative, sure did make her wave. His friend across the street was running the Democrat and showed this Irish. While the politicians were at each other on the stump, there was music in plenty behind. And, when the campaign was over, there was no more law for W. H. Barnard. He had got his finger in the ink and he followed the call. The law went to the "scrap."
 In the daily field in North Carolina the Star has been and is of a solitary type. Every page and every line shows forth the personality of its editor and owner. In a day when papers are more and more showing forth in contents and policy the hand of the business office, The Star—intensely individualistic—is a pleasing exception to the rule. For years and years it has consistently defied what had become general newspaper usage. Editorials and local items appeared bravely on the front page, as they still do. Although the paper has grown and prospered, it was only recently that it descended to the linotype machine. Even now Major Barnard sighs when he thinks of them.
 "They make a fellow say awful things sometimes."
