

THE CHRONICLE.

WILKESBORO, N. C.

Strange to say, the improvement in firearms has not increased the murderous result of battles.

A French picture dealer says that all of his unsold pictures are sent to the United States, where they bring fancy prices.

A recent parliamentary return shows that there are upward of $21,000,000 of unclaimed money in various Government departments of Great Britain.

Of the 12,000 miles which form the land girdle of China, 6000 touch Russian territory, 4800 British territory, and only 400 French, while 800 may be described as doubtful.

The warden of the Missouri Penitentiary feeds the 2000-odd convicts in his charge at an average cost of eight cents each a day, and, according to the New Orleans Picayune, they live reasonably well, too.

The deliberate judgment of Judge is "that the continuance of the Turkish Government after the last slaughter in Armenia is an insult to decent humanity the world over, and the European politics that treats it feebly or overlooks it is a hideous crime."

The mountainous regions of the western part of North Carolina truly afford a typical section for both summer and winter resorts. This fact has been taken advantage of by Northern people, who are now found in large numbers, enjoying life in this most delightful spot.

Land suitable for fruit culture in California commands a much higher price per acre than in New York. Anywhere near railroads the price is from $100 to $300 per acre, without any improvements, and of course if there are buildings and fruit trees planted, the price is more.

Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, London, is warring with the reporters for reporting his sermons. He thinks that newspaper reports interfere with the profits of his published sermons, and has been asking advice as to how he can prevent reporters taking notes of his addresses. It is believed his only remedy is to make a contract with his audience that they will not publish his sermons.

The age limit in the Chinese army is elastic, if there is any truth in an edict which is attributed to the Chinese Emperor. The document grants a piece of silk, ten bushels of rice and ten pounds of meat to soldiers upward of eighty years of age. A double quantity is allowed to those who have reached ninety years. A patent of nobility is granted to those who have survived their hundredth year.

A man in Australia had a new and brilliant idea not long ago in regard to the interpretation of the clause in his marriage vows: "Till death us do part." His wife died, luckily for her, as the following facts demonstrate, and since he was bound only till death to his wife, the husband refused to pay her funeral expenses. The court promptly decided that a husband's duties only cease when the undertaker's bills are paid.

Says the Electrical Review: In 1891 a young electrician, now in Paris, on looking through Carnegie's great steel rail plant at Braddock, Penn., casually suggested that electricity could be made to operate the widely separated pieces of machinery at a saving of many thousands a year. Recently Andrew Carnegie visited the plant for the first time in two years and saw electricity doing the work. This improvement, together with others, makes it possible for eight men to do the work 500 did in 1891.

An unusual thing, related by the Cleveland Plain-Dealer, in connection with the court is the holding, by the United States Grand Jury, that Scriptural quotations may be libelous. H. A. Busby, of Means, Harrison County, was indicted for writing letters and postal cards to David Handley, of Columbus, Ohio. On the envelope of the letters were the quotations: "Owe No Man Anything," "Let Us Walk Honestly," and "Many Years Thou Shalt Be Troubled." He was indicted on four counts on the ground that the language used was libellous and calculated to injure the character of Mr. Handley.

THE TELEGRAPH.

The darkness and the silence lie Between your soul and mine, Like some great river rolling by Beneath a night of stormy sky, Where not a star may shine.

But, as beneath the sullen brine 'Twixt lands of kindred speech, There runs a slender, living line O'er which there flash, by lightning sign, The thoughts of each to each,

So, 'neath the parting flood of death There runs a living line Of steadfast memory and faith, Of love not born for mortal breath, Between your soul and mine!

—Samantha W. Shoup, in Independent.

AS IN A LOOKING GLASS.

SCENE.—Boudoir and toilet of a society belle. The belle, who, besides being very beautiful, is still young and fresh, is seated in front of her dressing table under the hands of her maid, who is preparing her hair for the night. On the dressing table are a mirror and various articles of the toilet.

HE MAID.—"Madoiselle was a great triumph to-night; no?"
THE BELLE (abstractedly).—"Yes, Celeste, I think so."
THE MAID (with pride).—"The men all fall down and adore mademoiselle; no?"

THE BELLE.—"No, not all the men. Some of them. Enough of them."
(Sighing). "Too many of them."
THE MAID.—"That is good. Mademoiselle has embarrassment of choice."

THE BELLE.—"Yes, an embarrassment of choice. You speak truly, Celeste. (Sighing again). It is that which makes me—but, bah! why think of it all? I suppose it is the experience of all girls like me in society, with a fortune, a face and a facile tongue. There! That will do for to-night, Celeste; I am going to sit up for a little. I may read and I may write, I cannot say."

THE MAID (horrified).—"But mademoiselle has already lost so much of the beauty sleep."
THE BELLE.—"I am restless. Besides, if all be true that men have told me to-night, I do not need it. Good night, Celeste."
THE MAID.—"Good night, mademoiselle!" (Exit maid).

THE BELLE (alone).—"Five proposals in one night. That is, counting one that I suppose does not—ought not to count. Four of them at any rate such as a girl in her second season should jump at. As for the fifth—well, I won't think of it, I mean, if I can help it. I won't. Yet—but what nonsense! Let me review the others. First came old Totty. Sixty years old he said he was. He is eighty, if he is a day. Worth four millions, he said. That part is probably true. But, oh! Let us pass on to the next. Philip Egerton Denning, the writer and thinker; the literary lion of the season. Funny he should fancy me. I like him, too, myself. I cannot help admiring his intellect, and I feel that I should always respect him. Yet—(muses several minutes, then sighs). Who next? Oh, yes. (Laughing heartily). I must not forget him. Lord Tuffnut, the latest British importation, who did me the honor to offer me, with a monocle in one fishy eye, his title, his mortgaged estates and the family tree that, in its time, has borne an abundance of just such overripe fruit as he is. And for what? My youth, beauty, and money. Nonsense. Next. Ahem! The same thing, in a measure, only of our own manufacture. Tracy de Puyster Van Treffer, of the most cereulean of blue blooded Knickerbocker stock. Truly our country has reached a wonderful height in her industries when she can turn out anything so nearly like the English article, even to his morals, as Tracy de Puyster Van Treffer! There they are, all of them, labelled to the best possible advantage. All—except Jack. Poor Jack! Well, I might as well list him. Jack Willoughby. Something down town. Poor as a church mouse, handsome as Apollo, and true as steel. Ah, well! (sighing) I suppose I must not think of him. It is lucky, though, that some one interrupted us when he proposed, or I might have said yes. I was overcome with the heat of the ball room; and when he put his arm around me, and whisperingly begged for an answer, I felt so weak, for the moment, that I don't think I should have had strength to refuse him. But somebody came, somebody always does, and I suppose I am safe. I promised them all an answer in a week. An embarrassment of choice, Celeste said. (Closes her eyes and thinks).

A half hour or more passes, during which the belle appears to sleep. Suddenly she opens her eyes.
THE BELLE.—"I must have slept. But nothing in my dreams seemed to offer me any help. Oh, dear! Is there anything or anybody that can show me what to do?"
A voice.—"There is."
THE BELLE (startled).—"Good gracious! What was that?"
A voice.—"Don't be frightened. It was I."
THE BELLE (still more alarmed).—"But who are you? Where are you?"
A voice.—"Your mirror."
THE BELLE.—"But, good heavens! Mirrors cannot speak."
THE MIRROR.—"Mirrors can do a great many more things than people give them credit for. We reflect; why should we not speak? That we can do so is proved by my talking to you now. I have listened to all you have thought and would help you."
THE BELLE (trembling).—"Was I thinking aloud?"
THE MIRROR.—"No. But you cannot think and look into my face without every thought being known to me even though I may not reveal what is in your mind. I want to help you to decide your future. Are you willing, that I should?"

THE BELLE.—"You mean with regard to—"

THE MIRROR (blandly).—"I mean with regard to the five proposals you received to-night."
THE BELLE (after a pause).—"Which shall I accept?"

THE MIRROR.—"That I may not tell you. I can simply help you to judge for yourself."
THE BELLE (anxiously).—"How can you do that?"

THE MIRROR.—"By showing you yourself, your surroundings and your condition of mind, five years after your marriage with any one of your would-be husbands of this evening."
THE BELLE.—"Oh, dear! This is worse than chiro-mancy. Wouldn't it—wouldn't it be wicked?"

THE MIRROR.—"Not so wicked as it would be to marry the wrong man."
THE BELLE.—"I suppose that must be true. Well, what must I do?"

THE MIRROR.—"First, turn down the gas. Then place yourself facing me, and light the spirit lamp of your curling-iron apparatus. Now, take some of your pearl face powder, sprinkle it on the flame, and wait. (She does so. The surface of the mirror becomes heavily clouded). Which would you see first?"

THE BELLE (laughing hysterically).—"Oh, take them in their regular order."
THE MIRROR.—"Then, Mr. Totty, the eighty-year-old millionaire, first. What can you see? Speak!" (The cloud on the face of the mirror gradually clears in the centre, disclosing a picture).

THE BELLE (in a low voice).—"I see myself, handsomely dressed, covered with jewels, at an evening reception. Many men are around me offering me attentions. For some reason I dare not accept them. In a corner, jealously watching me, I see Mr. Totty. He scowls every time a man pays me a compliment. Everything is bright around me, but the very brightness seems to weary me, and remind me of something lacking."

THE MIRROR (grimly).—"Are you happy?"
THE BELLE (shuddering).—"No. Although bored to death where I am, I dread to go home, because I shall be alone with him, my husband. I see nothing but despair and waiting, constant waiting for release." (Picture vanishes).

THE MIRROR.—"You will not forget that. Now look upon this. (Again a picture forms). What do you see?"
THE BELLE.—"I see myself again, but alone. I have been reading, but have tired of it. There is something I want to do, something I want to feel, but I cannot. In a little room nearby I see Philip Egerton Denning, my literary, intellectual husband. He is very busy, writing. In my utter loneliness, I get up and go to him. Stooping over, I gently kiss him on the brow. He frowns, pushes me away, and tells me I destroy his ideas. I sign, turn away, and go to bed."

THE MIRROR (ironically).—"Are you happy?"
THE BELLE (bitterly).—"No. All the warmth in my heart is gradually being frozen by the cold indifference of the man I have married. He is too brainy to lavish any affections on his wife; his growing fame is more important than domestic ties. Show me the next."

THE MIRROR.—"Well, what see you here?"
THE BELLE.—"Another reception. I am sitting alone, however, utterly ignored by the many women present except in the way of an occasional supercilious glance at my gown, or a whisper to some one else about me behind a fan. I think it must be in England. Some of the women have red noses, and they all look tired and bored to death."

THE MIRROR.—"It is the fifth year of your reign as Lady Tuffnut."
THE BELLE.—"I see myself moving into another room where everybody is playing cards. His Lordship, my husband, is there, gambling like the rest. I tell him I do not feel well and would like to go home. He advises me to go home alone or amuse myself in the conservatory. He says there is too much of his money on the table to go to then. He means my money. I have seen enough of this."

THE MIRROR (mockingly).—"Are you happy?"
THE BELLE (sadly).—"No, but I am gradually becoming deadened to my misery."
THE MIRROR (as a new picture appears).—"Now you see Mrs. Tracy de Puyster Van Treffer, a member of the native aristocracy of New York. Can you see yourself?"

THE BELLE.—"Yes. I see myself once more alone. The room is handsomely furnished; everything looks rich and good. But I am waiting anxiously and listening intently. At every sound I get up and look through the blinds into the dark night. At last, as dawn is breaking, a cab drives up; I hear it. A few minutes afterward my husband enters the room. He scolds me in a thick voice for remaining up. A quarrel ends in my bursting into tears. He stoops over me to kiss me and I nearly faint with a nausea."
THE MIRROR.—"Are you happy?"

THE BELLE (fiercely).—"No. I am humiliated by his neglect, disgusted with his manner of life, and harassed with constant suspicion. I am utterly wretched."
THE MIRROR (slyly).—"There is only one more picture. Do you want to see it?"

THE BELLE (confusedly).—"Yes, I suppose I may as well. It is probably like all the rest."
THE MIRROR (as the last picture appears).—"Then behold! And tell what you see."
THE BELLE (very softly).—"I see myself again. I am sitting in front of a coezy fire of soft coal, sewing something light. Near me is—near me is—yes, it is Jack. Mr. Willoughby. I mean. He is talking to me very gaily, and I am smiling and listening. Now the door opens and two children come bounding into the room; a boy and a girl. They want to bid us good-night, they say. They look so much like Jack they might almost be—almost be—his nephew and niece."

THE MIRROR (gently).—"Are you happy?"

There is no answer from the belle, for she wakes up with a start.

THE BELLE (after looking earnestly at the mirror, which is as bright as crystal).—"I have been dreaming and it is nearly five o'clock. But I am not sorry. An embarrassment of choice, Celeste said. I thought so, too, but we were both young. I told her I might read and I might write. (Smiling.) Well, I have read a great deal; I think I will write a little. (Writes).

My Dearest Jack—I don't think I will keep you waiting a week for my answer. I am yours as soon as you come to claim me.

A Remarkable Fall of Stone.
M. L. Fletcher, an English mineralogist, tells of a remarkable fall of stones which took place at some early date in the history of Mexico. He describes fourteen huge masses in all, and advances the very likely theory that they originally formed a single meteoric mass that was shattered by the intense heat engendered while passing through the earth's atmosphere. The fragments of this immense meteorite are scattered over a section of country sixty-six miles in length and twenty-two in width, and it is estimated that its total weight was but little short of 20,000 pounds. One piece of it, now in the National Museum at Washington.—Atlanta Constitution.

How Horses Sleep.
When the horse sleeps, one ear is directly forward, why it is not known. A naturalist thinks this is to guard against danger, being a survival of their original wild habits. He says: "Watch a horse asleep through the window of his stable, and make a faint noise to the front. The ear will be all attention, and probably the other will fly round sharply to assist. Now let him go to sleep again, and make the same noise on one side. The forward ear will keep his guard, with possibly a lightning flick round, only to resume its former position."—New York Dispatch.

Tamed a Pair of Elk.
A Cheshal County (Wash.) farmer has lately been creating a good deal of interest with a pair of elk which he had tamed and trained to do many things usually done by horses. A few days ago a traveler offered him a good price for his elk, but the farmer refused to part with them. The same night a cougar got into his barn and ate up one of the creatures.—Chicago Herald.

"Wroth Silver."
"Wroth silver," from the several parishes of his hundred of Knightlow in Warwickshire, in England, was collected a few days ago by the Duke of Buccleugh as lord of the manor. The custom dates back to feudal times. For every penny not forthcoming the prescribed penalty on the defaulter is $5 or else the forfeiture of a white bull with a red nose and ears.—Chicago Herald.

A Mexican paper states that a new project for the sanitation of the sewers in the City of Mexico, at a cost of about $25,000, calls for the building of some twenty-five windmills in different parts of the city to rotate paddle wheels in the sewers and quicken the current to one metre per second.
Six devices for the humane slaughter of domestic animals, four for horses and two for cows, have just been imported from Paris by the Connecticut Humane Society. A hood which blinds the animal is put on, and attached to it is a spike which when driven in with a hammer pierces the brain and causes instant death.
A meteorite, weighing 196 pounds, has been found on the salt marsh east of Malga dawas, Northwest Australia. It was an iron-stained mass of bright, pure metal, not a particle of stone being visible, and when struck with any hard substance rings like an anvil. It is two feet long, one foot at its greatest width and eight inches thick.

High Smokestacks for Factories.
Aside from the fact that tall chimneys are better for the public health, by lifting the deleterious product of combustion far into the upper air, it would seem that technical considerations alone might recommend them. But there has been a fad lately for low chimneys in factories, and W. B. Le Van expresses the weighty opinion that they are a mistake. As to first cost, there is no saving over a high, well-proportioned chimney, and the entire drift of manufacturing requirements demands the building of high chimneys so as to enable more fuel to be burned in a given time and space, thus increasing the power and output of the boilers. A rapid draft is equivalent to a large fire-grate area, and has the advantage that the heat is transmitted much more rapidly to the boiler by reason of the higher temperature obtained. Moreover, in many industries, the goods produced are liable to be spoiled by smoke and smut permeating the lower strata of the atmosphere.—Atlanta Journal.

Wild Animals in Texas.
Sheep and cattle ranchers in Southwest Texas are asking the State to help them to exterminate or keep down the wild animals that are playing havoc with stock in that region. So far from the advent of settlers thinning out the panthers, wolves, and coyotes, the animals are increasing greatly in numbers through the plenty of food afforded by the vast herds of cattle and sheep. The ranchers have spent thousands of dollars in trying to keep the pest, but without avail, and now they want the State to take a hand.—Chicago Herald.

Mines of Soap.

Few people know that soap is found in natural mines in California. These mines are on the shores of Owen's Lake, and are accounted for by a scientist, who has recently investigated them, as follows: The water of the lake is strongly impregnated with borax and soda. In the water a curious species of grub breed by millions. These grubs go through their various transformations and finally emerge as short-winged, heavy-bodied flies, very fat and oily. They live but a few days, dying and falling into the lake in such numbers as to be frequently washed ashore in layers more than a foot thick. The oily substance of the dead flies blends with the alkali of the borax and soda, and the result is a layer of pure soap, corresponding in thickness to the drift strata of the dead flies, a foot deep of the flies making a layer of soap nearly an inch thick. These strata, repeated year after year, have formed the celebrated "Soap banks of Owen's Lake," where a large force of men have been constantly employed for a number of years.—New Orleans Picayune.
