HOW TO STOP BREEDING THE PESKY HOUSE FLY

There are several species of flies which are commonly found in houses, but over ninety-five per cent are true house flies, which are not capable of biting. Another fly which is hard to distinguish from the house fly and often found in houses is capable of biting like the horse flies. This one is known by the name, stable fly. There are also several greenish or bluish flies occasionally found in houses, and it is with all of these that we have to deal in attempting to mitigate the fly nuisance.

The life history of the common house-fly which does not differ materially from that of other flies is essentially as follows:

The eggs are laid on both horse and cow manure, from which fully ninety-five per cent of all flies have been proven to originate. Eggs are also placed on all kinds of refuse, such as garbage piles, decaying meats, food or other filth. The eggs hatch in from one to twenty-four hours into small, active, white maggots.

The maggot stage lasts only five days in warm weather. When grown the maggots are about one-third inch long, pointed at the head and quite blunt at the other end. The maggot changes to a reddish brown pupa stage from which the adult fly eventually emerges.

The pupa stage lasts five days in hot weather. Thus it is seen that the complete life cycle from egg to adult may be complete in ten or eleven days.

The generations during the summer may number fifteen or more.

Each house-fly lays about one hundred and twenty eggs and the progeny from one individual at the end of fifteenth generation would, therefore, number over ten million, counting only one hundred eggs as an average.

There is only one real good method of lessening the number of house-flies, and that is to do away with the breeding places or prevent flies from breeding as they would without hindrance. Many things have been tried to kill house-fly maggots in manure. Chloride of lime is fairly successful when used in large quantities, but it is impracticable to follow this method under ordinary conditions. The best thing, therefore, is to have the stable manure hauled out and spread in the field at least once a week. In this way the maggots are killed and practically none have time to mature and those that mature in the field do not often return to the house.

House-flies do not usually fly over a few hundred yards from their breeding places, so that it seems practicable, by united effort on the part of those interested, to do away with most of house-flies in any community.

There are several successful fly poisons that can be bought in any community and we have learned quite recently that formaldehyde is one of the best and cheapest poisons that can be used. This costs about fifty cents a pint and one teaspoonful in a cupful of water is all that is necessary, and should be exposed in shallow plates. It is well to put a piece of bread in the plate. This poison is most successful if used in places where flies are very numerous, such as milk rooms, back porches where refuse is placed, or around the kitchens.

When attempting to poison flies, it is best to use the poisons outside of the buildings as well as inside. Flies can often be poisoned by the hundred on porches where they are waiting to enter whenever the door is opened.

We will never succeed in greatly lessening the house-fly nuisance by simply poisoning or trapping the flies, but whenever people become interested enough to prevent flies breeding they will find that a little additional work toward killing off the flies by the use of poisons, sticky fly-papers, traps, etc. will be well worth the trouble.

BATHTUBS IN MEXICO.

Made of Cement. They Are a Real Luxury in a Hot Climate.

"Unless you have been in the tropics," remarked the man who had just returned from a trip to Mexico, "you can't possibly realize how great a luxury a cold bath can be. It's not that the climate is necessarily warmer than a New York summer, but the natives have worked out the problem of bathing to its ultimate conclusion. They have invented the ideal tub. On the great private estates in Mexico baths are in use today which were hewn out of the solid rock centuries ago by slave labor. They are located for the most part in the vicinity of running water and are fed by bamboo pipes, but in many cases they have to be filled by the old fashioned method of carrying a bucket up and from the spring.

In the cities the so called stone baths are made of cement. The residences of all well to do people are provided with them, and they are a feature of the native hotels. They are usually about ten feet long by four deep—bath swimming tanks, in fact. The tropical custom is to fill the baths late at night. By the following morning the water will have acquired a limpid coolness that acts like a tonic upon the body. When one remembers that near the equator it is almost as warm in the morning as it is at noon and that water taken direct from the city mains is always tepid the advantage of the stone or cement bath is evident."—New York Sun.

Good Roads and Schools go Together

Good roads and better schools, the two together, the one leads to the other.

The sentiment for better schools has so grown that there are some forty or more special local tax districts, and that which the county needs to be aroused, on more now than ever before is the question of good roads. Many good roads advocates can be found here and there but as a rule there is too much indifference. The people need to be aroused and see the benefits to be derived from good roads.

The following from the Concord Tribune preaches the good roads doctrine in a convincing manner:

There has been a very noticeable increase in sentiment during the past year or two, and especially during the past few months for better public roads in this section, and, for that matter, of the State. The people have begun to realize something of the real value of good roads and good schools.

Good roads easily double the value of farming lands. This has been demonstrated in every place in which modern highways have been built. And not only do the good roads double the market price of lands, but they greatly increase the value of the products of the soil. In remote sections the transportation of the product to market is quite a considerable expense. In fact, many farm products for which there is a market never reach market for the simple reason that the cost of transportation is so great that they are not marketed at all.

Schools stand for an intelligent citizenship, progressive-ness and happy homes. Good schools linked with good roads and improved and intelligent farming methods will stop the immigration of the boys and girls of the rural sections to the cities and nothing else will stop them.—Asheboro Courier.
