ONLY "A COW"

She was only a medium sized, fawn-colored Jersey cow, yet her place will be hard to fill. (Won't it be wonderful if this can be said of us when we pass!) She laid no special claim to aristocracy,—only just a good Jersey cow of good blood and good raising,—two attributes of success whether of cows or men. As a calf, she was neglected and love for her own brought the care and caress of a woman's hand to her rescue. How quickly she responded to this! And how, like calves are children, too! The family loved her for her care and cost; so when the household goods were loaded on trucks, Poli, too, went to the new home.

After a time, the calf that was became mother to the calf that is. She was rubbed and fed and petted each day. The highest grade of dairy fed was hers. She was treated like real cattle folks, and how she responded by giving gallons of the richest milk,—enough to supply butter for the table, to drink by the growing, hearty boys in the home, and more to express charity to the needy and neighborliness to friends. Over and over we are taught the lesson so hard to learn: give and you get. It pays to put our best into anything worth doing at all; and, especially is this true of a good cow. She will for all your service reward you with refreshing milk and golden butter.

But she is dead. Even the good cows, or good folks must die. It is the way of all the earth that death will surely come sometime. However, the neglect, the broken law, often steps before the tread of God and ends the blessing or life that otherwise would continue into the years to come. A thoughtless act of kindness—a fork of half-cured Sudan grass—brought to its close the life of the best family friend. Don't say it was the providence of God. He only permitted it, did not will it. It was the thoughtless deed of man. But something, somebody must always pay. Law is not to be moved or persuaded by entreaty or prayer. Break its rules, bear its consequences. So if we bestow an ignorant care nature makes no allowance for lack of knowledge. So, if I feed cow or child food that sickens and kills, it is not God's responsibility, but mine. No thought, desire, love, can restore that which ignorance, negligence, or deliberate act has taken away. Experience alone remains as our constant teacher.

She was only a cow, but she is gone. She was loved and petted. She was good and true and beautiful in nature and in service. She will be missed all from the boy at the foot of the family up to the man at the head. Since she was only a creature without a soul as God made her and since there is no known process or power by which Omnipotence changes that which he made very good in the beginning, we shall not expect to see her in a heaven beyond. But with this meditation comes the thought: It pays to be good and to do good in bounds of earth existence alone. The lessons learned from a dumb brute should help heavenward him who was made a little lower than the angels. She was only a cow, but was a good cow. But we are men in form and soul, and should so live. But if any one who reads this prefers being just a cow, then be a good cow. It will pay both you and those who are dependent more or less on you for those things that shall finally go the way of all the earth.
