HOMESPUN SENSE

ETHICS OF BANKING

By MELVIN A. TRAYLOR
President
First National Bank, Chicago

Melvin A. Traylor

The function of a bank is, after all, a quasi-public one, and the banker who has no regard for the ultimate prosperity of his customers and his community will be very quickly condemned by the common sense of the latter, and will ultimately destroy not merely his own reputation but also bring about the downfall of his community.

In other words, the prosperity of a bank is founded upon the prosperity of the community and country in which it is situated.

Banker in Strategic Position

The banker has always held a strategic position in the business world, and obviously the first requisite necessary is that the banker shall be honest. I do not mean with "honest" merely that he should be honest to the extent that he would not embezzle funds or swindle his customers and clients. The honesty to which I refer must be of a much higher and greater type.

He must be willing to forego momentary advantages because in the long run the specific action may bring harm to his customers or possibly to business generally.

Sentiment in Business

Sentiment in business? Yes, there is nothing else. What is it that prompts agitation for reforms in every avenue of life? Why is it we are interested in better agriculture, better roads, better schools, better community life? It is sentiment; it is affection; it is pride; it is sense of duty.

It is faith, confidence, hope, the intangible that forms the very warp and woof of modern business, and nowhere in so large a degree is this true as in banking, and in no sphere of banking to so great an extent as in the country bank.

Truly the work of the country banker touches the life of the community at every point, from the wedding chancel to the cemetery, and at no point does it touch so lightly as at that of cold-blooded business consideration. It is sentiment from the opening hour until the closing hour, and many hours when no banking can be done.

At Eye Proof: M

Culinary Jingles by Virginia Gibson

The man who says he does not dread
He might some day be toothless
Has never faced that fearful fate
Or is—(politely)—truthless!

IMPAIRED or what is worse, absent teeth are still a real affliction despite all the wonders that modern dentistry and oral surgery have accomplished. Teeth really decay from the inside out, then the decay, in contrast to popular and erroneous ideas, is a mineral decay on the inside of the tooth rather than the outer coating of enamel. For this reason, teeth are susceptible to decay, cracking and crumbling.

Calcium is especially necessary in the diet for the growth and maintenance of sound, healthy teeth. The basis of teeth is laid before birth so that it is necessary that the expectant mother should have plenty of calcium in her system both for the sake of the child and to preserve her own teeth. Children need plenty of calcium in the diet if their teeth are to develop properly. Much of this is secured in milk but there are foods that contain this essential mineral. Pure calcium phosphate, such as is used in self-rising or preleavened flour, introduces additional calcium into the dietary, as well as phosphorus, another important mineral that many of us are apt to be short of and which is necessary for strong, straight, healthy bones. Every piece of cake, biscuit, cookie or waffle made with self-rising flour, then, means just that additional protection for bones and teeth.

A good cookie recipe is as follows:

Chocolate Drop Cookies.
1/4 cup butter 1 1/2 cups raisins
1 cup sugar 1/2 cup milk
2 squares choco- 1/2 cup nuts
1 egg

Cream fat add sugar gradually; add egg and beat well; add melted chocolate. Sift and measure flour and add alternately with the milk, beginning and ending with flour. Add the raisins and nuts by small spoonfuls on a breaded banana sheet and bake in a moderate oven (375°) for 15 minutes. Those who prefer a rather soft cookie will enjoy this.
