THIS, THAT AND THE OTHER

By Mrs. THEO. B. DAVIS

If the red bud and the flowering quince that are planted in the east side of our front yard have not made friends they are at least not clashing as they have been doing for the past few weeks.

They have shed their blossoms and have only green leaves now.

We made a big mistake in setting them so close together, not realizing that they would bloom at the same time.

They were never so full as this year and you couldn't enjoy one without turning your back on the other. The soft color of the red bud made the brilliant quince flowers seem overdone while if you looked at the quince first its glow made the red bud look like a dead chicken's comb.

Sometimes I wonder whether it was in the springtime that the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden and in it put the man that He had formed and into whose nostrils He had breathed the breath of life.

And is our share of the heritage of that divine breathing the reason we are so strangely impelled to make our own planting at this season?

I believe in calling a spade a spade; that is much better than calling it a shovel which is often done.

The oldest and the loveliest of the spirea in now in bloom. It comes about half-way between the blooming time of Thunbergi and of Van Houttei. The blossoms are in long, graceful sprays like Van Houttei, but the separate flowerets are quite double, each cluster forming a dainty bouquet. I think this variety is called Plumina.

While I believe wholeheartedly in advertising I do regard some examples of it as disgusting, not to say insulting. For instance: The manufacturer of a certain perfume declares that it "stirs the senses, thrills, sets heart on fire." And he pleads that feminine readers use it "and know the joy of being utterly irresistible." There follows a description of how men will flock around the perfumed lady beseeching her favor, while friends envy her strange power to win love.

I have become accustomed to seeing pictures of most intimate wearing apparel displayed to attract the most possible attention, and the time has come when the laws of hygiene know no reticence; but I do hold that the man who would forsake all and follow a subtle scent might as well be allowed to wander with the breezes. He probably wouldn't be worth going after.

As for the sweet-smelling lady who could so lure all in her vicinity she ought to be thoroughly disinfecting and kept in close confinement.

But it may be that the ad exaggerated slightly.

The 1936 political campaign got off to an early start this week with formal announcement of John A. McRae of Charlotte that he will be a candidate for governor. Col. T. L. Kirkpatrick, also of Charlotte, informally announced sometime ago. Lieut. Gov. 'Sandy' Graham is in the running, and among the most prominently mentioned probable other entries are Clyde R. Hoey of Shelby and Congressman Robt. L. Doughton of the ninth district.

R. T. "Dick" Fountain of Rocky Mount is now campaigning for the seat of Senator J. W. Bailey and Governor Ehringhaus is said also to be a candidate for that office. The boys are getting an early start and will have to have considerable stamina to endure the fifteen months from now till the 1936 primary.

Mr. McRae's announcement was brief. He promises to wage a dignified campaign, and not to go into counties having a candidate.

Live on the sunny side of the street; shady folks live on the other. Stay in the sunshine and try to get other people there if only for an hour or two at a time.—Marshall Wilder.

Poultry Meeting

On Wednesday night a number of men and women met at Wake- lon school auditorium to hear Prof. C. L. Parrish tell them about how to have better flocks of poultry. He has charge of the extension work of State College. He made a very informing address on culling and bloodtesting flocks. Prof. H. C. Guager poultry disease specialist, came with Mr. Parrish and helped out in answering questions about diseases of chickens asked by those present.

Mr. O. D. Massey, who operates the hatchery, said that if he could get eggs from accredited flocks he could sell forty per cent more chicks than he does at present. He said that many people in the community who want the very best send elsewhere for their chicks. Mr. Massey now pays an average of eight cents a dozen above the local market price and did not get eggs sufficient to operate in the first of the season. It is hoped that a great many people will see Mr. Massey, who is looking after securing better flocks, and arrange to have their flocks culled and blood-tested this year. Mr. Parrish said that by blood testing and culling one's flocks could be made more profitable to the extent of more than paying the cost of having a specialist down from State College to do this work.

Movies Looking Over This State

A representative of some of the larger moving picture producers spent last week in North Carolina scouting out a possible location for studios. California tax rates are about to run them out of Los Angeles and Hollywood, he said. Mr. Pelton stated while here that there was too much rainy weather around Raleigh and further east. If the studios come to this state they will probably locate in the Sandhills or the Piedmont. Several years ago there was considerable talk of one of the big studios coming to Southern Pines.

Holding Starts on 25th Auditing Year

Henry G. Holding first and only auditor of Wake county, Monday entered upon his 13th term. Appointed by the legislature when the office was created in 1911, Mr. Holding has been regularly elected by the people each two years. During all of that time there has been no question raised about the integrity of purpose and character of the efficiency of the auditor's work. Differences of opinion as to policy in tax matters have arisen but in the most of these cases time has proven the auditor to be right.

Schedule Changed

A change has been made in the schedule of the rail-motor bus on the Norfolk-Southern. It now reaches Raleigh at 10:45 a. m. and leaves there at 3:35 p. m.

This will be of interest to shoppers, since it allows nearly five hours in the city.
